Adventures With a Purse

THERE is a certain shor that I like to call my "shop of values." Seems to me you never go in there that you do not find any number of fascinating things at tempting prices. And I should consider my visit to town incomplete did I not spend at least a little time there. Today, for instance, there was such a wealth of lovely things—reasonably priced. Under a card bearing a sign "Extraordinary Sale" were lovely little pale pink camisoles in wash satin, for $2. And they are unusual at that price, for they are trimmed with fine lace and dainty little silk rosebuds. Then there were warm scarfs for sport suits and which would make most welcome Christmas gifts, with prices ranging from $4.50 to $6.50. And a table of blouses at $3.95 included some of georgette and some of net. I would strongly advise that you stop there when you go for a day of Christmas shopping. THERE is a certain shop that I like

For the friend who reads I can think of nothing nicer than a book "carrier." Let me describe it for you. At first glance you might take it to be an oblong leather handles, with a leather handle to match. Only it has no clasps. What it really is, however, is a leather cover

The leather is of good quality, and comes in green or red. And, of course, the handles form a convenient way to carry the book. One shop has several dozens of these, but when the supply is exhausted no more can be had. They cost only $2, and judging from the way in which they are selling, it will not be very long before they are all sold.

A SCHOOL GIBL.

I have been interested in silk petticents lately, because I want to buy one for a Christmas present. And I have been particularly interested in values and quality. I saw some for $5.90 which might have done for me, but for some one to whom I want to give an extrance present they did not satisfy me, And then finally I came across these for $6.75, and I can heartily indorse their value. They are of jersey silk, with finely pleated ruffles matching the top in
