Cop on the Corner

"Why is it that Hammy is goin' away on a yacht?" Maggie wanted to know when I came home off me beat this mornin'.

"He had to do it," says I. "The job-hunters is pressin' him so hard it was a question of his goin' in or gettin' seasick; so he quick hunted up a sea-goin' yacht."

"This is a pity," says Maggie, as she reasoned up the 'son, "that these patriots ain't got a sense o' shinin' up a heart as well."

"Behave yourself," says I. "A Philadelphia job hunter ain't got no organ in any way correspondin' to a heart—just an overpowered 'itch' for office. In addition to 'hustlin' plans, they have joined the Cabinet Makers' Union, better known as the 'Poison Squad.'"

"Who is this union?" Maggie asks, givin' her attention to the 'son.

"Why, they're a lot of down at th' heel politicians," says I, "aided an' abetted by the 'Corridor Cooties.'"

"Who's them?" quizzes Maggie.

"Mostly City Hall clerks an' fellows with payroll jobs," says I, "who spend their dinner hours an' a lot of other time dopin' out 'Who's Who' in the Hammy cabinet. Generally they pick out five or six men fr' th' same job. Their selections range all th' way from members of th' Gridiron, Terrapin an' Five o'Clock Clubs to decent, respectable members of th' Newspapermen's Association."

"This their pleasure to drag these ancient an' honorable old political reporters from their retirement an' line them up in th' full glare of publicity fr' some job in th' Hammy payroll. 'Tis a shame, I tell you, Maggie. No man is safe from the attacks of this Poison Squad. It seems to me—say, what's th' matter with this 'son, woman?"

"Ah, ha," says Maggie, "now I know what little Terence did with that bar of naphtha soap he was playin' with."
