Film Flashes of Interest to Fans of the Photoplay

TF THE statement of an eminent psychologist is to be taken seriously that nine out of every ten people in this great big world are made miserable because of the fear of superstition in one form or another. Douglas Fair banks is doomed to be a mighty gloomy young man for the balance of his nat ural days.

Doug may not have the regulation Ph. D. on his diplomas and it is cer Ph. D. on his diplomas and it is certain that he never deleved very deeply along the lines of belief in supernatural agencies; however, he disagrees with the learned student and in his reply his theory has taken a broadside at superstition in every phase, counting it out for the full ten units in his forthcoming production, "When the Clouds Ro!" By," featured next week at the Stanley.

It may be that the dynamic Dong is the tenth of one of the particular short dozen embraced by the doctor's remarks because he hasn't lost even the sugges-tion of the wrinkles in his smile, de-spite his very harsh treatment of nu-merous agencies involved in the super-stition clau.

WALLACE REID, the bandsome WALLACE REID, the bandsome screen star, says he invented the "shimmie." Here is his claim to fame:
"I was hunting one autumn in the Iellowstone with a party of friends. I forged out alone on a deer track, located the animal, and wounded it. But I had to follow it so far before it dropped that it was dark and I lost my bearings and had to finish the night in a brush canyon. When I awoke in the morning exactly half the deer was gone!

"I got to thinking and the more I thought the more trembly I became. At precisely that moment I invented the 'shimmie.' Around noon I shot a mountain lion. That renewed my train of thought and I gave an encore of the dance and perfected it. Suppose he had preferred me to the deer? Thank heaven for luck!"

Mr. Reid is at present starring in preferred me to the deer? Thank heaven for luck!"

Mr. Reid is at present starring in "Hawthorn, U. S. A.," which will be shown at the Arcadia and Falace Theatres next week with Lila Lee. Theodore Roberts. Tully Marshall. Charies Ogle, and Edwin Stevens included in the cast. The picture was directed by James Cruze.

ONE of Major Reginald Barlow's first from service overseas with the American army is with Marcion Davies in her new photoplay, "The Cinema Murder," to be seen at the Victoria next week.

Major Barlow is a well-known figure on the stage and in the movies, attended the first Plattsburg camp, received his commission, and was dispatched to France soon afterward. He received his promotions as the result of meritorious service in action. With Major Robert Warwick he shares the honor of being the only screen actor to reach that high vank.

An interesting coincidence in connection with the filming of the Phillips

An interesting coincidence in connection with the filming of the Phillips Oppenheim novel of the same name was the fact that both Major Barlow and Director George D. Baker were in the original company which toured the country in the old play "The Land of Cotton." The two met at the studio recently for the first time in fifteen years.

Harold Titus. "The Last Straw" is being adapted for the screen and will be produced early next season by Fox Films.

Mr. Russell is at work on Paul Dickey's story, "The Lincolu Highway-man," under the direction of Emmet I. Flynn.

WILL ROGERS, the Goldwyn star, of previous cowboy roping, lariat throwing comedian and Ziegfeld Follies fame, will be the feature at the Palace week of January 5, when he will appear in "Jubilo." It is the picturized version of a story by Ben Ames Williams which was published in the Saturday Evening Post. Good-nature and kindliness bring out their own reward in this ness bring out their own reward in this newest Rogers photoplay. In this picture the charm of the ex-cowboy and sical comedy favorite finds full scope musical comedy favorite finds full scope in the character of a misunderstood hoho. It is just the sort of role that Rogers is peculiarly fitted to bring to life. The cast supporting Mr. Rogers in "Jubilo" consists of four principals besides the star. Each character is a distinct type. Josie Sedgwick is the lovable beroine; Charles French, her father, the victim of a plot to imprison him: James Mason, a confirmed failhim; James Mason, a confirmed jall-bird; and Willard Louis, a roly-poly comedian whose mission in life seems to be making other folks happy. Clar-ence G. Badger directed "Jubilo."

The result of this was that for a few seasons we in Philadelphia heard pretty much everything that was composed by acknowledged living masters abroad and it is not going too far to say that the success of this policy, together with the belief on the part of the general public that Messrs. MR. CAMPANINI was a great conductor, but he had other qualities which were invaluable to him in his position as general manager of the Chicago Opera Co. Among these were his receptiveness to everything new that he believed to be good enough to deserve a hearing, his thorough knowledge of the technique of the operatic stage as regards stage settings and dramatic power on the part of his singers and his almost unfailing judgment of operatic aspirants.

ager that "among singers he was a great impresario and among impresarios he was a great singer. Even by changing the word "singer" to "conductor" this could never be truthfully said of Cleofonte Campanini. He was undoubtedly great in each capacity and it was the possession of qualities which enabled him to be successful in both roles that will make his position in the Chicago Opera Co. almost impossible to fill with a single incumbert single incumbent. A prominent American composer, was prominent American composer, was that of Horatio Parker, once the winner of a prize of $10,000 offered by the Metropolitan Opera Co. for the best opera by an American, later the winner of another large prize for an opera, offered by the Federation of Women's Clubs and the composer of many works Clubs and the composer of many works

Clubs and the composer of many works in the larger forms.

Mr. Parker's talent undoubtedly lay along the lines of the more severe music. He was a composer of unquestioned knowledge in all the branches of composition, and he had a skill and a facility with contrapuntal works which few composers of 'his nationality ever attain. His compositions show great workmanship, but not so much of inspiration, and while it is not fair to say that he made counterpoint and its allied branches an end and not a means, there can be little question that the student of his works feels admiration for the skill displayed in their construction, rather than for their emotional content.

Thus far the finest and most poignant expression of the French in this line has been through their art posters, some of those produced during the progress of the conflict being veritable mas-and orchestration to secondary positions. This emotional intensity Mr. d'Indy has never shown in his previous works to any considerable extent, and he has not exhibited it in his new symplony to any greater degree.

He is polished, smooth and facile in the expression of his own style of musical thoughts, and in music of this kind he is naturally successful. But like most of the latter-day French composers, he is disposed to be rather artificial in emotional feeling, or at least in the expression of it, and as this element is the sine qua non of a symphony cast along heroid lines it is not to be wondered at that Mr. d'Indy's latest orchestral composition does not reach the heights desired.

Another thing which may enter into the subject of music based on the war is the fact that in the past the great art works have rarely come from the victors. It is the vanquished who have produced them. The psychology of this is easy to see, and it may be that the war will sweep away some of the ridiculous exaggerations which have clogged German music for the last quarter of a century, and a really great composition may come from that side.
