FRIENDS AND ENEMIES

BEN CABBAGE and MIKE WILSON

By EDWIN J. POLLOCK

RIVALRY in high school, college and in the service on athletic fields and friends Mike Wilson and Ben Cabbage, star football players at Lehigh and Penn State respectively.

IT IS seldom that two athletes face each other on the gridiron in so many different uniforms. Wilson and Cabbage have battled each other five times, Mike on four different teams and Benjamin on three. Both are Philadelphia boys and their opposition started on local scholastic fields.

THE war call came and both responded. Wilson entered the marines and Cabbage the ambulance corps. They met again at Allentown when the League Island marines lined up against the Yankees. Later in the same season they met on the same eleven at Franklin Field. Their last engagement came last fall, with Wilson on Lehigh and Cabbage on State. Of the five contests Cabbage's team has won four. Wilson's only victory was at Northeast.

"HE'S a mighty good man," said Mike of Ben. "He's not only a good tackle, but a good end, a sure catcher of forward passes and a hard tackler. He plays a clean game always."

"HE'S a crackjack end," said Ben of Mike. "He's the most graceful and cleverest man on forward passes I have ever seen. He's fast and a hard man to take out of a play. And I'll say this for Mike—he plays clean football."

Anglo-Saxon World Dream Dissipated

pute over the league of nations and the refusal of the Senate to ratify the treaty made the ideal of warm relations between this country and England, illuminated by a great personality, utterly unavailing.

Our relations with the European powers, especially with England, had got into politics. The ancient suspicion and distrust which had existed before the war had been revived and sharpened.

The Irish issue, which disappeared during the war, came once more to the front. If we were to enter into new and closer relations with Europe we were justified, on the whole, in our new attitude of criticism and skepticism. We might look sharply into the character and affairs of our proposed new partners. It was good business to do so.

Instead of finding Anglo-Saxon brotherhood over here, the English found Yankee business shrewdness, and, moreover, England was an issue—might be made one—in our party politics, such as she has not been since the issue used to make votes in a presidential campaign to "trust the lion's tail."

Grey Forced to Keep Silent Under such circumstances the best service a British ambassador here could do for his country was to keep silent in all the languages he knows. Viscount Grey has done so.

Instead of a sort of grey extraordinary from one Anglo-Saxon people to its Anglo-Saxon brothers, what was wanted for the time, anyway, was an old-fashioned, formal, severely correct diplomat. Viscount Grey could hardly have said anything helpfully about the league of nations, about his own country, about relations between "the two great Anglo-Saxon peoples" without getting himself into politics.

The inability of President Wilson to receive him really made his position easier.

His departure probably means that the plan held by the British when he was sent here is postponed as unrealistic at this time. When the presidential campaign is over and the league of nations covenant is adopted, and when the present critical impasse into the character, goods and chattels of prospective partners is completed, England will send a Cretin or a Grey here, but probably not till then.

Viscount Grey goes home with the league of nations situation not at all clear. Whether there will be a compromise depends upon whether the President Wilson will make a sufficient surrender. Senator Lenroot's statement of yesterday shows that the mild reservationists mean to yield little.

They stand substantially for the League of Nations. The effect of their getting behind Senator Lodge, and at the same time making the credit on that lodge should deal with the Democrats, is to place a bent pin and a bit of red bannel for bait, should they be foolish enough to attempt this grizzled game.

My statement of last week that the Vars people would invoke the civil service law to prevent the removal from office by the new administration of hundreds of place holders is being fruit in two different ways.

Individual office holders are combining to fight removals; others, of the class known as ward appointees, are coming over to the side of the administration.

The frank public declaration of Governor Sprout that the state administration would recognize Mayor Moore as the head of the party in this city has cleared the atmosphere. The Governor is not only one of the clever leaders of the state, but he is far-sighted and discerning. He is a man of convictions, and the public manner in which he has announced his course to which he will adhere for the future.

There are two or three other subjects though which have not been settled yet. Auditor General Snyder still remains mute as to his reason for totally ignoring Mayor-elect Moore's administration in his recent selection of Magistrate Watson as mercantile appraiser. His action, and the surreptitious manner in which it was performed, especially near the danger line of insult to the new administration.

Looks Like Effort to Aid Vars Magistrate Watson is not only a prominent Vars leader, but he represents the Vars faction in an Independent political party. It looks as if the auditor general had endeavored to strengthen the hands of those who are fighting the Moore administration. Indeed that is the construction being placed upon his action by the friends of the new Mayor.

The Grundy-Crow episode isn't closed yet. The ally manner in which Auditor General Snyder dismissed the question on his side to the city last week did not convince anybody who knows anything about the situation. The intimation that Joseph R. Grundy has been frightening into compromising his position one-sided affair. It is the friends of Senator Crow who have been seeking Mr. Grundy with propositions to take his hands off the situation. The president of the State Manufacturers' Association has sat tight and said nothing.

Plan Big Round-Up for "Whisky" Sales

Greenfield, one; and Thompsonville, Conn. two.

Mrs. John Dunn, aged fifty, of Harpersburg, refuses to disclose the name of the "friend" who gave her a drink of whisky which has resulted in her serious illness.

There was business in the whisky substitute Peate Richard Miller, of Lancaster, Pa., drunk, and as a result of this he is in a hospital.

Augustus, a thirty-year-old country Georgia, have had twenty deaths in the last few months due to drinks that contained food alcohol or other poisonous matters.

The sixth victim, in less than three weeks, of alcoholic delirium in Easton, Pa., was Joseph Zimmor, a prominent merchant, who first became blind and then died last night. Two of the other victims have died.

Madley Hoyne, state attorney, and Coroner Hoffman of Cook county, Ill., conferred today on the sale of whisky adulterated with whisky, and the death of ten persons in Chicago since Christmas. Hoyne said manslaughter charges would be pressed against sellers of the stuff.

Two Under Arrest at Reading Reading, Pa., Dec. 29.—The arrest and hearing today of Mrs. Pearl Moskalski, proprietor of the People's Hotel, and the hearing of Frank Strzelecki, a saloonkeeper, both charged with selling alcohol adulterated with whisky, are the latest developments in the drive of the local and federal authorities to stamp out the liquor traffic in Reading.

Strzelecki was held under $2,000 bail for trial in the federal court in Philadelphia. Mrs. Moskalski testified that she purchased "whisky" at Strzelecki's saloon, and from the effects, it is alleged, one of a Christmas party, Anthony J. Labak, is now confined in the Homeopathic Hospital, almost fatally ill. One death occurred in this city two weeks ago, it is also alleged, from the effects of the same "whisky."

Whisky in Hay Seized

Vanocher, Me., Dec. 29.—One hundred and fifty cases of whisky concealed in a cartload of hay in transit across the border here from New Brunswick were seized last night by a United States customs officer. It is said to be the largest seizure of liquor ever made on the Canadian-Maine border.

PERHAPS SANTA DID

Little Tuberculosis Patient Hopes Kris Kringle Used Mail

"Maybe Santa sent 'em by mail," said little Frank Ellis, 7-year-old, of 1210 South Delaware street, yesterday to Miss L. Beckstesser, social service worker from the Henry Philip Institute. "I seen in the paper that the Christmas mail ain't all delivered yet."

Frank, who is seven years old and suffering from tuberculosis, asked Santa Claus for a pair of shoes so that he could attend the children's clinic at Philip's Institute every Saturday morning. He was the only one among many tuberculous children attending the institute whom Santa failed to visit.

FLAMES DESTROY AUTOS

Fire destroyed two automobiles in the garage of Howard H. Jones at 4745 Penn street early this morning. The fire, which was of undetermined origin, started in the rear of the building, and had reached the machines before it was gotten under control. Other cars in the front part of the garage were saved. The building was not badly damaged.

STOVE BLAMED FOR DEATH

Child Fatally Burned and Women's Clothing Ignited, Coroner is Told

Testifying at a coroner's inquest today, Verne Cooper complained that a gas heater in the Woodland Avenue Presbyterian Church was a menace to the congregation and that in addition to being the cause of his daughter burning to death, several persons narrowly escaped death or injury through ignition of their clothing. The inquest was held into the death of Florence Cooper, six years old, 6005 Greenwood avenue, who died December 26 from burns she received in the church on December 14.

Cooper testified that the stove was dangerous, as it often became over-heated and that a number of women had their skirts catch fire. Coroner Knight said he would have the fire marshal investigate.

CAMDEN "WILD MAN" JAILED

Wore Black Beard and Frightened Women, Police Say

A man who has been living in a primitive state in the woods adjacent to Albert street, Camden, was arrested by the police today and sentenced to thirty days in the county jail by Recorder Staehouder. The police allege the man has been frightening women and children in the neighborhood.

The man gave his name as Antonio Desoria, thirty years old. When arrested his clothing was in tatters and his face was covered with a large black beard. He had been living with no other clothes than leaves and boughs, and existing on whatever he could find that was edible. The residents had begun to call him the "wild man."

Elkton, Md., Dec. 29.—One child dead and three critically ill are the results following a Christmas treat given the scholars at Faville Public School when the children partook of candy now said to have been poisoned. The dead child was Rebecca, the youngest daughter of William Goodman.

An investigation has been started by local authorities to ascertain where the supposedly poisoned candy came from. Many of the children ate the candy.
