Questioners for the Most Part Receive Courteous Treatment and Consideration

HUMORS OF ENUMERATION

"Is the dog in the house? Put him out. I'm bringin' a stranger in."

That was the first salutation one of the women census takers in the northcastern part of the city received when she started her work. By the time she had spent two hours getting data concerning fifty-five persons within half a block on North Fifth street she was convinced that if variety were the spice of life Philadelphia had some mighty There was the adorable old deaf woman whose answer to most questions was "Hey? What you want to know that for?" and there were cunning youngsters who wanted to show the visitor all the things Sauth brought and how the monkey climbed a stick and why the train wouldn't run. There was a motherly body who "took in" board-ers but wanted mighty bad to get rid of her place, and there was the fifty-two-year-old maiden lady who grew purple in the face when asked her age and flew into a rage when asked how she earned her living.

All Are Considerate

All Are Considerate "Tor the most part every one mas-been very considerate and has given in-formation readily." said Mrs. Rose Nicholson, one of the census takers. "I have covered only one block so far. Every one I have met knew what census meant and was ready to answer quee-tions. Now and then there was a snob-bish person, but when the head of the house seemed cranky or queer I just made myself that much more agree-able and pleasant. and pleasant.

"If is a great study in human ba-ture," she continued. "It is surprising how little people do know about themnow little people do know about them-selves, though: even those with more than the average intelligence. They have to stop to figure up their ages, to think of the names of all the children, and half of them don't seem to have the remotest idea what their husbands the remotest idea what their husbands or brothers or sons are doing. They know where the man works and his trade, but often they don't know what department or just the nature of the work."

Many Varieties

"I have found most of the people owning their own homes, or paying for their homes on the installment plan. It is interesting to see what a variety of professions are represented in one block. There will be a baker liv-ing over the shop on the corner, real estate dealers, physicians, laborers and declared that the men would insist professions all within a small radius." "I have found most of the people

Christmas trees, their tiusels in various stages of dilapidation, holy wreaths and the general holiday afternath were found everywhere. While mother talked to the "census lady" small son shot his popgun, blew all the horns and made as much din as he possibly could to dis-tract attention from the business of the call. It was plain to be seen that the parlor door was opened only on special occasions, so son wouldn't have all the tree ornaments and most precious toys torn to pieces before the holiday season was ended. Stocks will then be checked from
