DREE ... Mrs. Anderson's voice was disapproving. "I don't see how you could be more free in the city than you are here." She had offered Virginia and the baby a home and Virginia's cool refusal of it was a surprise.

"But Mother, I'd stagnate here. This He would kill me. I want to get out and do things. Why, I'm only twenty. "What do you think you could de that would take care of you and the baby? You have never worked ; why. an't get you to help me down here. I you'd stay with us, Virginia, you could be a great help to me with the work and you wouldn't have so much time to think foolish notions if you had a certain amount of regular work to do every "Housework! I hate it! said Vireinia, pussionately. "The same old chores every day. I want to live !"

She really did not understand what She really did not understand what it was that she wanted, certainly her ideas were very vague, but Mrs. Ander-son thought her attitude very strange, She felt suddenly that Virginia needed checked, reproved "Do you think that Jimmy would have approved of such goings on?" she

Instantly Virginia's dark little face uivered into emotion, and she rose from he hammock and ran upstairs. Barbara the harmock and ran upscarrs. Barbara was asleep in a tiny crib that had been jimmy's, and Virginia looked down at the small dark face so like her own, and could hardly see it for a mist of evening she wrote a note That evening she wrote he her find Bill Lyons asking him to help her find resilion. Somehow she felt sure that a position. Some of the would prove a friend. She went to the postoffice with the letter and on the way home seme one stepped up out of the shadows and murmured a "good evening." She urmed to face one of the men she had church, a boy not much olde nmy. His father was reputed t its wealthy and they lived in a big house at the end of town, walk along with you?"

They strolled along together and illed, but when they reached the Au-lerson house Virginia did not ask him she was quite conscious that Mrs. derson was sitting on the porch and a had an idea that Melville Horton uid be welcomed too obviously. "Wasn't that young Horton?" Mrs. derson ushed as Virginia stepped up the norch

Why didn't you ask him in?' I didn't want to.'' In Mrs. Anderson's mind the idea of young Horton was not un sant. If Virginia would be sensible in Crystal River she migh for herself and Barbara it orton residence, she might be wife of one of the most in ing men in town. Mrs. An
