

EVER, EVER GREEN
By FANNIE HURST

Al, an acrobat in a show tries to persuade Lola Lalady, a member of the show, to marry him and get the show in the small town they are approaching on the train. He accuses her of flirting.

CHAPTER II
"EE, always Lee. I think, you're married over Lee and that's what I think you. I think you want a stick around with the director of this show, that's what I think."

"What's it to you? You ain't in my show, I'm a good girl, I am, and no man can cast a situation about me. I ain't no..."

"I'm an ambitious girl, I am. I ain't ready to settle down yet in a tank by a long shot, but I'm going to be doing a single on the Amsterdam Roof by next summer, see if I don't. And saving it on is what'll get me there, I gotta make it on Broadway, I am."

"Take it from me, hon, and I'm your friend for telling you, you're cute and all; but I never seen any one could touch you, but there ain't no future to little soubrette and chorus stuff like yours. You ain't got the voice, hon."

"What's it to you? You ain't in my show, I'm a good girl, I am, and no man can cast a situation about me. I ain't no..."

"Get in, Al; what you hanging around for? For Gawd's sake, Floss, quit chewing your rag and pile in. Now ready, boys, drive on!"

Please Tell Me What to Do
By CYNTHIA

A Challenge to "The Little Doc"
Dear Cynthia—Behold, a novice pleads for admission to your column! I have never paid much attention to the letters that come to you, but today there was a letter that held my attention and although I put the paper away that letter kept haunting me, and I just had to answer it. I refer to the one written by "The Little Doc."

"The Little Doc," can you look the world square in the face and say without any qualms of conscience that you have never once cheated in the game of life; my ledger is open for inspection, my accounts balance? If you can say that, I will withdraw my argument and am convinced that you are a man among men.
