

EVER, EVER GREEN

By FANNIE HURST

Lola Lalady, member of the "Forty Thieves" company, justifies her flight...

swing 'em on—dang it, swing 'em on! Speed or up back there—speed!

CHAPTER III "LOVE me, baby-doll!" "Silly!"

"I have set three fractures, but I can't look at that back until we get him to the hospital, little lady."

"That's what I give you, the shivers, is it? I'm some little shiver-giver, ain't I, kid?"

"I have set three fractures, but I can't look at that back until we get him to the hospital, little lady."

"What's the use trying to help a little girl that ain't got no temperament, when she's as cold as ashes?"

"I have set three fractures, but I can't look at that back until we get him to the hospital, little lady."

"Where the trees met darkness above their heads, so that not even the stars showed through, she stood suddenly on tiptoe so that her eyes, bluer than Italian waters, were parallel with his."

"I have set three fractures, but I can't look at that back until we get him to the hospital, little lady."

"For answer he leaned over and kissed the curved line where her lips met. The act of resistance of the "Forty Thieves" stragglers opened with a stealthy plucking of muted violin strings—a device popular for the mystery it twangs and insinuates."

"I have set three fractures, but I can't look at that back until we get him to the hospital, little lady."

"Whether you're a farmer, truck gardener, florist, have a country estate or a back-lot garden you need the Midwest Utilitor. It's useful on all farms."
