

LEAP FROM TRAIN INJURES PRISONER

Pittsburgh Real Estate Man Gives Alleged Victim $3000, Then Tries Escape

In a desperate effort to escape from a detective who was taking him to Pittsburgh, Dominio Supaliri, twenty-two years old, leaped from the window of a fast-moving express train at Pottsville, Pa., when he fell, preventing the success of his break for liberty.

Detectives tracked Supaliri to the Bryn Mawr Hospital, where he was again made a prisoner. He was scientifically recovered from his injuries this morning to resume his journey to Pittsburgh.

He is accused of stealing $5000 from Dominio Manaleri, of Youngstown, O., in a Pittsburgh land transaction. Supaliri was captured here yesterday morning at Tenth and Fitzwater streets by Detective Ferris, of Pittsburgh. They boarded an express train at Broad Street Station in the afternoon.

Manaleri went with them. On the train Supaliri promised, it is said, to return the $5000 and gave Manaleri a check for $3000. Then the detective permitted the prisoner and Manaleri to go to the rear of the coach to talk over the settlement.

While they talked Supaliri suddenly jumped into a compartment and closed the door in Manaleri's face.

The train was passing through Pottsville at the rate of fifty miles an hour. Supaliri apparently was unable to open the car window and smashed the glass. He jumped out, rolling down the embankment.

Manaleri informed the detective. The conductor refused to stop the train and the detective was not able to alight and take up the pursuit until the train reached Harrisburg.

Meanwhile Supaliri, badly cut and bruised, made his way to the farm house of Mrs. William Patterson, where he offered $100 to the woman if she would call a physician.

Dr. R. C. Hughes dressed the man's injuries and sent him to Bryn Mawr Hospital. He was found there last night by Detective Ferris and several Pennsylvania Railroad policemen.

"When I asked him why he tried to escape after giving Manaleri a check for $3000," Detective Ferris said today, "he said that he was afraid that he would have to go to jail despite the settlement."

GUMPS WISH LITTLE CHESTER KNEW REV. ROBERT NORWOOD

Think Two Could Live Like Princes in Australia—Pleased With Clergyman's Spicing of Religion With Humor

"Hello, Min!" remarked Andy Gump, caressing his cleanly chiseled chin, "who do you think this Rev. Robert Norwood, of Overbrook, is anyhow?"

"Don't bother me now," replied Min. "You know Uncle Jim is waiting to take us to the opera."

"But this Mr. Norwood said something about you and Uncle Jim and me in a sermon at the Episcopal Church in Overbrook," sang out Andrew as he crawled weakly into his dress suit.

"He said that he thought we were a good thing for his parishioners."

"What a charming fellow he must be," broke in Uncle Jim, who had just come into the room carrying Chester on his shoulder. "Indeed, I should like to take him to my half of Australia. He and little Chester would live like two princes."

"He also said real humor was just as much a part of religion as anything else," continued Andy. "If I got a church more I might know what he means."

"You're funny, all right—in that 1902 dress suit," snipped Min as she adjusted her husband's tie. "In about two more years you will be as much of a relic as these old birds in iron suits you see in the museums."

"Now, Min," Uncle Jim put in pleasantly, "Andy is a Gump all over and none of us Gumps are much on dress. That's one of the things this Mr. Norwood likes about us—we are just ourselves, the Gump clan."

"Clan is good," threw off Min; "Andy is so fond of the Scotch."

"As I was saying," Andy continued, "throwing off the inference that Mr. Norwood says that he believes in a religion that has plenty of laughter and regular everyday enjoyment in it, and that he believes that kind of a religion stands up the best during the other six days of the week."

"I've always believed that myself," remarked Uncle Jim, as he patted Chester contemplatively on the head. "If I could find a minister like that, I'd go to church more myself. I wonder if he would consider a call to Australia—he is the type of man I would like little Chester to hear every Sunday. We must get Mr. Norwood to come to Australia."

By this time Andy was twirling his scarf about his neck, Min had put on her fur coat, Uncle Jim had broken out his high hat and the whole party was set for the waiting limousine.

"Well, well," exclaimed Uncle Jim in his best manner, "here are five extra tickets I had forgotten I had. I'll give Mr. Norwood a ring and see if he won't come and sit in my box with us this evening."

"Overbrook 1118-J," said Uncle Jim on the wire.

"Sure," was the final answer of the Rev. Robert Norwood.
