

A DAUGHTER OF TWO WORLDS

A Story of New York Life By LEROY SCOTT

Printed by special arrangement with the American Stores Co. Copyright, 1920, by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.

HE CERTAINLY was, agreed Jennie. "I say, Jennie, Jerry looks an awful lot like you tonight."

"No, I think he takes a lot more after you!" Jennie protested.

Harry shook his head. "No, like you." He looked from the baby up to her and then back at the baby—and meditated.

"He's going to have black hair and a rather dark skin." His voice softened a little.

"Jennie, I have an idea that he may not look very much like either of us, but he may look a lot more like Black Jerry—your father, I mean."

"Like—like dad?" she breathed.

He did not quite understand what was rising in her mind, for he went on smiling. "It'll be a fine thing if he does look like your father, Black Jerry."

"He's all right," she said. "I'd have been a wonder if you had ever had the chance of going to give our Jerry!"

"She did not answer. Soft tears filled her eyes. For the moment her mind was filled with a tender, poignant ache."

"How her dad had loved her!—even to the point where he had believed that his mere existence was a burden on her life, and out of all life, in order that she might no longer be shamed by his name, he had decided to die."

"She had grieved deeply during the year and a half that had passed since she had received Jerry's sorrowful announcement of his purpose of passing out of her life, and out of all life, in order that she might no longer be shamed by his name."

"There was a ring of the apartment bell, which was answered by the maid, and after a moment Uncle George came in. Time had made little change in him."

"For many years he had looked a spry, brisk man, and he looked no different now than he had been until his last day."

"Uncle George was called upon to advise young Jerry, which he did for several minutes with very real enthusiasm. Then Jennie recalled something."

"By the way, Uncle George, there was a man—some kind of a soldier—here to see you a while ago. He said he had a message for you."

"Did he leave it?"

"No. He said his orders were to deliver it personally into your hands. I told him you'd be here about this time, and he said he'd come back."

"Speaking of soldiers, Uncle George," said Harry, "what do you think of my new news about our relations with Germany? Do you think we're going to get pulled into the big fight?"

"Sure as fate, Harry—and soon."

"If it comes to that," Harry gave a wistful look at Jennie—"I'd like to be over there in France, mixing it up with the rest of them."

"Uncle George spoke before Jennie had a chance to reply. "Your spirit's all right, son, but you'll never have a chance to get over."

"Why not?" demanded Harry.

"Because you're in the wrong quarters than the gay life of hotels and restaurants with which most of his acquaintances identified him."

"Because, son, if you get into the wrong quarters, you'll be going to need fighters at the front, and fighters right here at home making things to fight with."

"The government is never going to let such an expert engineer and manager as you go to the front."

"I'm going to get into the wrong quarters, Uncle George, when you'll be doing all the fighting."

"I'll be doing all the fighting, but I'll be doing it in a different way. There's a lot of things that you'll be doing all the fighting."

"I'll be doing it in a different way. There's a lot of things that you'll be doing all the fighting."

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES BATTLE OF THE GIANTS

BY DADDY

(In last week's story Peggy, Billy, the Giant of the Woods, and their animal and bird friends went to Charming City in Maryland, where they helped Red Beard win a picture play in which Billy rescued Peggy from Giant Fierce Fangs.)

CHAPTER I The Monster Cowboy

PEGGY awoke from a sound sleep to find herself in the rocky hills above the Charming City in Maryland. How she got there she didn't know, but there she was, and with her were Billy, the Giant of the Woods, the Bull, the Sam, Johnny Bull, Billy Goat and their bird friends.

"You are just in time, Peggy," said Billy. "Red Beard is going to put us into another moving picture, one far more exciting than that which we made last week. And here he comes now as fast as his legs will carry him."

Indeed, Red Beard was coming fast. He was fairly rushing up the hill, carrying his moving-picture camera over his shoulder.

"Get ready!" he shouted, as he reached the top of the hill and began to set up his camera. "Get ready for our new photoplay. 'What kind of a picture is it going to be?'"

"I don't know," cried Red Beard, "beginning to turn the crank of his camera, in great excitement. 'It may be a tragedy, with all sorts of trouble.'"

"But if you are making the picture, why don't you know what kind it is going to be?" asked Peggy, much puzzled by Red Beard's answer.

"I don't know because Giant Fierce Fangs has gone on a rampage and I can't see the slightest idea of what mischief he is up to. He may make the hills, but whichever it is going to be, it is starting right now. For here comes Giant Fierce Fangs on his wild western rampage."

Red Beard, still cranking busily,
