

PHILA. IS AFTER SHAW MEMORIAL

Contest Expected at Suffrage Convention in Chicago Beginning Tomorrow

MANY GO FROM HERE

An active discussion is anticipated at the annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage Association in Chicago over the national memorial for Dr. Anna Howard Shaw. The convention opens tomorrow morning and continues for a week.

Both Bryn Mawr and the Woman's Medical College want the honor. Both have established chairs in honor of Dr. Anna Howard Shaw and are sending delegates to present pleas before the convention. Both institutions are willing to establish departments.

Mrs. John O. Miller, head of the Pennsylvania League of Women Citizens, has been asked by both Bryn Mawr and the Woman's Medical College to make the appeal. Dr. Ellen C. Potter will represent the Medical College and Mrs. F. Lewis Slade and Mrs. Charles H. Tiffany will present Bryn Mawr's claims.

More than thirty Pennsylvanians have started on their way to the convention which will probably have from five to six hundred women in attendance. From Philadelphia are Mrs. George A. Piersol, Miss Erma Klahr, Miss Lida Stokes Adams, Miss Helen Fogg, Miss Frances Gobhart, Dr. C. L. C. Douglass, Dr. Ellen C. Potter and Mrs. Harriet L. Hobbs. Mrs. E. E. Kierman, Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, the Misses Mary and Nannie Lee, of Sharon; Mrs. E. B. H. McCauley, Mrs. Forest Morehead, Mrs. Mrs. Thomas Ross, Mrs. C. G. Hoag, from Haverford; Mrs. Francis D. Maxwell, from Lansdowne, and Mrs. Frank Barber, of Swarthmore. Allegheny county representation includes Mrs. John O. Miller, head of the Pennsylvania League of Women Citizens; Mrs. W. W. Ramsey, Mrs. A. G. Holmes, Mrs. Nathaniel Spang, Mrs. Alexander P. Moore (Lillian Russell), Mrs. A. M. Fubler and Mrs. William Rees.

Which Tells of Afternoon Tea

After Laurel Stone, of the Chronicle, interviewed Granville Burton things began to happen. To Burton this girl was a new type and high-handedly he decided to make her his second wife.

CHAPTER IX
GRANVILLE WINONA BELL knew Laurel better than the girl knew herself during these days. She knew the girl's capacity for devotion, the veil of romance that obscured the frankness of her nature. Winona's interest in Granville Burton's attentions to Laurel was not based alone on curiosity; she was eager for Laurel to be happy. And Laurel was happy, she had never been so happy in her life nor so beautiful. Nothing tired her and she bubbled over with life every minute of the day.

As Winona confided to Ted Banning, Laurel was like a magnet these days that drew everything toward it irresistibly. Winona was too sensible to envy her volatile nature. She was contented enough with the rather prosaic engagement that existed between herself and Ted; it was safe and sure if not so exciting. Winona wished with all her heart that Laurel would marry Tom Benton who had eyes for no one else. Benton was an old newspaper man. He loved Laurel and knew the easy-going ways of the crowd; he could make her happy. Why, she could keep right on with her work at the paper and what good times they could have! But Laurel, who liked Benton immensely, hadn't any illusions about him. She would have laughed at the idea of thinking of him seriously.

Winona came home from the office one cold drizzly afternoon in early May and divided herself of her wet things. She built a little fire on the hearth and proceeded to make herself some hot tea. Laurel was out on an assignment, but Winona expected her home any minute and consequently when the bell rang sharply she pressed the button and went back to her seat before the fire, leaving the door ajar. A vigorous knock brought her to her feet and a second later she was facing a man who stood on the threshold. She had never met Granville Burton, but she knew intuitively that this was he, and she him," thought Winona. "And he's either going to make her divinely happy or utterly miserable. I wish I knew which."

But after Burton had left Winona made no mention of anything to Laurel. She had found that nothing was gained by obvious methods.

Perhaps if Burton had not made plans and had drifted, more things would have been different. But it was not his way. Once having made up his mind he went about getting what he wanted, and he wanted Laurel to fill a certain niche in his life. A week from the day he had dropped in casually to tea with the two girls he took Laurel to the theatre. Laurel went to the theatre two or three times a week with some one from the paper, Benton or one of the other men. They always had the best seats as they went on passes, but of course they did not dress. Afterward they would journey down to the office where the story would be rushed up, and then they would go to one of the many restaurants that crowd Park Row for something to eat.

This time Laurel went to the theatre and sat in a box. She wore a white evening gown on which she had squandered a lot of money, and a fur-trimmed wrap. This man who sat beside her in conventional dress clothes made a fairy tale of life and a magical city of practical New York.

Tomorrow—Granville Burton asks Laurel to marry him.

French People of City Hear Consul
At the annual fete of the Philadelphia branch of the Alliance Francaise last night at the New Century Club the address of welcome was delivered by M. M. Paillard, the French consul, who is honorary president of the organization. The program included music, songs and recitations.

Burton liked this friend of Laurel's. She was well-bred and intelligent, but she lacked something that Laurel had. She was too much like himself, too logical, too practical; she somehow did not spell woman to Burton at all. Even though he was not in love with Laurel, the man in him liked the woman in her, the softness that made her cheeks flush even while she hung back gayly; the starry eyes that might grow gray and lively; the lips that might tighten momentarily ruled by the firm chin beneath, but able to soften to womanliness almost immediately. Laurel Stone, willful, independent, capable and fair-minded, was nevertheless all woman.

"SALADA"

Cup quality is the true test of tea goodness.

In its subtle delicious flavor, "Salada" is the tea for the "party" cup, the tea for the sweet intimacy of a "pot o' tea for two."

In its unvarying strength and economy in use, it is the tea for the family table.

A Gathering of Charming New Spring Hats—Special at $5

Hats like these for $5 are mighty few and far between, as you'll agree when you see them.

There are smart little toques of shining black toile ciree—very fashionable this season—adorned with plump little oranges or colored rings. Hats of dark straw turn sharply up from the brow and widen out at the sides most becomingly. Then there are broad, floppy brimmed hats of coarse straw with light-color facings. In fact, there are hats of all the types most suitable for Spring, and there are very few hats alike.

A particular word should be said about the little sailor shapes of glossy pineapple straw with just a hint of a roll to their brims. A navy blue one with a bunch of saucy cherries is a delight.

(Market)

Women's Hand-Made Chemises—$2.50

Of fine, closely woven long-cloth, they are made by hand and are neatly scalloped around the top.

A Pretty Pink Nightgown, $3.50

Soft pink batiste is made into a slipover gown that is embroidered in pink and blue and shirred in the front.

(Central)

Women's Sturdy Service Umbrellas

They're covered with firmly woven black cotton with a tape edge and the frames are strongly built. The short handles are sometimes tipped with bakelite and are finished with rings of bakelite or silk cord. $3.50.

Very Short Umbrellas

without ferrules are of navy, purple, brown and green silk and measure only 30½ inches from tip to tip. They have bakelite rings or silk wrist cords. $10.50.

(Central)

Dainty White Swisses and Voiles

are here for women's Spring blouses, aprons, frocks and kiddies' frocks.

In dots of various sizes, stripes, plaids and figures, 36 and 40 inches wide, 50c, 65c, 75c, $1 and $1.25 a yard.

27-inch dotted Swiss or checked dimity, 45c a yard.

(Central)

Women's Finer Wraps
Are Much Reduced in Price

For instance, a soft black Bolivia coat, beautifully lined in silk, can be had in extra sizes 42 to 52 at $65, which is considerably less than it was originally marked.

Other coats of Bolivia, chameleon cord and such fine fabrics are marked at proportionate reductions, their new prices ranging from $39.50 to $185.

Evening wraps also have had their prices lessened and lovely affairs of velvet and brocade, sometimes trimmed with skunk, mole, sealene or mouflon, are marked much less than usual.

(Market)

Trim White Uniforms and Aprons for Maids
—Made in Our Own Workrooms

where special attention is given in making them right. Good, practical materials are used in making neat regulation styles.

Straight band aprons of lawn, hemstitched or tucked, are 75c and 85c.

Nurses' aprons, cut quite full, with fitted bibs, $1.75.

Uniforms of fine white line are in two styles. One has a collar that can be worn high or low and a plain front, the other has a box-pleated front, and both are $6.

Butlers' Aprons

—of white line are 85c.
—of sturdy blue and white plaid material, $1.25.

3000 Yards of Cretonne
60c a Yard
(Last Year's Price)

A case has just been opened up, so the cretonne is fresh and fine; not any mused or handled goods. Attractive floral and verdure patterns in a pleasant variety of light and dark colors are all 36 inches wide.

It's about time for putting up new hangings, covering pillows, or making slip-covers, and this is an opportunity to save on them.

(Central)

Gleaming New Silk Frocks
at $23.50 to $35

Silk is the most Springlike of all materials and these fresh, pretty frocks of taffeta are most delightful. Many of them are quite youthful of line and have simple bodices trimmed with a bit of embroidery done in heavy silk or beads; or perhaps sleeves and neckline and even tunic will be edged with a frilly little ruffle. Brown, navy, Copenhagen and taupe are the colors oftmost asked for.

For Service and Comfort

Choose Wool Jersey

This lightweight material has a wonderful amount of durability and the added virtue of not musing easily. Slip-on dresses caught at the waist with a narrow belt have comfort in every line. In navy, tan, brown, Pekin and taupe, these dresses are trimmed with embroidery done in wool or braid, with sometimes a gleam of tinsel. There is wide choosing at $15 to $23.50

(Market)

Reduced Prices Prevail on Several Hundred Good Skirts

For as little as $3.85 a good gray whipcord skirt can be had, a skirt that will stand much hard wear.

At $4.85, $5, $9.75 to $15

there are wool plaid skirts, checked velours, plain serges and tricootines, and some taffeta and tricolette skirts. Of course, sizes are incomplete, as there are but two or three skirts of a kind. There is wide choosing, however, at each of these prices and goodly savings in every instance.
