TOMORROW night we will have the A small breakfast will follow the cere mony at the Gladstone. Bal Masque and tonight the Groomes' party and then the season will be over.

Somehow I am rather glad the season is nearly over. I hate to have to set it, but the behavior at some of the salls and smaller parties this year has been so beyond what we Philadelphians been so beyond what we Philadelphians have always thought stood for good have always thought stood for good have always thought stood for good have won't have to meet that sort think we won't have to meet that sort of thing for a while at least.

of thing for a while at least.

And if as many say, it's a consequence of the world war and the freedom which the younger set experienced in selling bonds, etc., to any and every man on the street that has made them so very—well, very—it will be a year vieue filles' come out, and each year vieue filles' come out, and each year will be farther and farther away from the war. And so we may hope the manners will improve.

Mrs. Adrien Francois Wellens, of Gowen avenue, Mt. Airy, and her sister, Mrs. William H. Dohan, of Merion, are spending a week at Atlantic City.

This sounds pretty strong, but, my dears, I believe what I see with my greyes. And when it comes to going to a ball, as I did a few weeks ago, and finding several of the younger girls stretched out full length on the upholstered sofas in the foyers of hotels, with their feet up on the end of said with their feet up on the end of said sofas, I think it's about time to say a setzs, 1 to the say 'em strong, too. few words. And to say 'em strong, too. Did you ever hear of such a thing? As the mether said to her little girl, who Frecks held on the shoulder with a half-inch band of jet or rhinestones and cut under the arms down to the waistine. That is true. And you aren't at the Artists' ball in Paris either. But a private hall given by a gentleman and lady.

As one woman said to me the other day, "If I could say, well, but it's not my friends' daughters who dress and set that way, it's some of those who have come here lately and are not really old Philadelphians, but I can't, I've seen the daughters of my own friends dance and jazz and 'shimmy and wear such apologies for frocks as I never dreamed I should see outside of the curiosities of Paris."

I suppose this is a trade, but I am henest to goodness mad. Something ought to be done. Some one brave enough to make an impression should to semething active and strong.

Far be it from me to advocate highnecked ugly dresses. There's nothing there is a bappy medium, and a small

VOU do see wonderful sights in the You do see wonderful sights in the streets these days! I could not help laughing, though I know how mad that stirl must have been. I was waiting at a crowded corner for a car when a woman with high naloshes on her feet started to like her way neatly across the street. Suddenly from the other side of the Mreet a young man was inspired to cross and without looking up he started jumping from one lump of ice and slush to another, until, of course, he naturally made for the same bit of ice the young wenan was making for. Neither saw it ether, and so they met with a hang and both sat down in that awful mud. And if I ever saw a madder woman I don't remember it, nor a more convulsed members of spectators, traffic cop included.
