Which Tells of the Dinner-Dance

Laurel Stone's interview with Granville Burton resulted in their marriage, and the results were far-reaching. Laurel, from a position on the Chronicle, became the wife of a very wealthy man and the mother of two children by an earlier marriage. She loved Granville Burton with all her heart, but to him she was only a very lovely figurehead.

CHAPTER XIX
"RED LONG, Harriet's husband, was a jolly and prosperous looking. At the dinner party he sat on Laurel's left and made her laugh frequently. Harriet, who sat on the other end of the table, watched Laurel from the corner of her eye. Laurel was exquisite, in a gown of sapphire velvet, with the necklace of sapphires which Granville had given her sparkling over the velvet of her neck and throat.

Winona, too, watched Laurel and wondered. Could this be the girl who had worked with her on the Chronicle, who only a short time ago had worn shabby hats on that crown of ruddy hair, this wonderful woman with her hair thrust through with a comb of brilliants, with her fresh charm and easy pose? But there was something else in Laurel's manner that keen Winona knew had not been there before. An added maturity, perhaps, a repressed attitude that was sophisticatedly charming but which lacked the utter spontaneity that Laurel had possessed during the days of her engagement. Winona could no more have imagined Laurel flushing and paling alternately as she spoke of her lover than she could have imagined Granville showing anything but his perfectly cold, hard-polished surface.

There were several of the younger set present, and among them Marion Worth, Marlon Worth was very youthful—so young, in fact, that she found it hard to disguise the fact that she blamed Laurel because she herself was not giving this dinner party in Granville Burton's home. Marlon had a fragile, girlish prettiness. She was very like Ruth Maddox, Granville's first wife, as she had been at her age. She wore pale blue gauze, and her arms and neck were a little too thin. She sat on a low couch with Harriet and a Mrs. Craig and catered unobtrusively to the older women. Marlon was a sweet parasite, willing to agree with any one who seemed of more importance than she.

Laurel had invited several young men, but Marlon was at the age where she scorned men between twenty and thirty as children. She had wanted, more than she had ever wanted anything in her young life, to marry Granville Burton, and because Harriet had taken her up and had sponsored her cause in a way she had felt that her dream had a chance of materializing. She had a little desire to dig her kitten claws into Laurel, to hear some one talk about her,

ELITE JOIN THE UNWASHED WHILE FOUNTAIN GURGLES

Rittenhouse Square Residents Must Forgo Usual Bath Until Water Shortage Is Remedied—Davis Raps Waste

Water—water everywhere—but not a drop to bathe in. This is the predicament in many homes in the Rittenhouse Square section.

It might be an exaggeration to say there is no water whatever. There is some, but it drops languidly and hesitatingly into the tub; and those of great girth and large displacement have considerable difficulty in signaling themselves in sufficient aqua pura.

And James, the valet, therefore gets a blast from his master every morning because the "bawh" is almost waterless. Meanwhile the big fountain spreading like the chestnut tree in Rittenhouse Square bubbles boisterously and perseveringly and has done so all winter.

Naturally the residents of that section are indignant. If they want to bathe in their third-floor bath they turn the water on the night before and it gurgles into the tub through the night.

Like all other squares, Rittenhouse is under the supervision of the Fairmount Park Commission. Some of the commissioners are down at Palm Beach, where the Atlantic ocean is more liberal than the Rittenhouse bathtub, but those who are still here say that the whole matter is exaggerated.

Some of the commissioners say the fountain does not affect the pressure in the neighborhood.

Chief Davis, of the water bureau, thinks differently. "Residents of homes should have water first and fountains should come next. If this fountain has been running all winter, it's typical of the waste which is going on all over the city."

"A small electric pump placed under the fountain would solve the matter, but as there are many fountains in the city that would increase the cost of electricity."

"I cannot imagine," said the chief, "who wants to sit in a cold square in a snowstorm and watch a fountain play. It would be much better if the fountain were stopped from November to April."

FIND FILMS FAIRLY MORAL

Interchurch Federation Committee Will Report Favorably

Upon the whole, the moving picture films displayed in the city are free from objectionable features, but the posters outside some theatres verge upon the immoral.

This, in effect, is expected to be the report of the social purity committee of the Interchurch Federation of Philadelphia, which has been making a tour of the motion picture houses. The results of the survey will be announced Thursday night at the annual meeting of the federation in Tabernacle Presbyterian Church, Thirty-seventh and Chestnut streets.

Your Dollars Contain More Than One Hundred Cents, When Spent at an American Store

Whereas, technically, the dollar contains just one hundred cents, its true value can only be measured by its purchasing power—by what you can do with it. Little wonder then that in these days of economic pressure the CROWDS LEAD TO OUR STORES. Everyone should know, what our customers have long since learned by experience, that our Producer to Consumer plan is not a mere claim, but a living, energetic business principle working out to your advantage, every day in the year.

We are doing more today to reduce, and hold down, the cost of living than any other agency, either fancied or real, in existence.

Don't you want some Kolb's Bond Bread?

IF Bond Bread is even better than most home-made bread—it is due to your public-spirited committee of judges. They spent hours in selecting the very best home-made loaves in the Bond Bread Baking Contest. And those very top-notch loaves were the models for Bond Bread!

Supper time — is Bond Bread time for him

- A bowl of cool, sweet milk —
  - some nicely sliced Bond Bread—
  - that's a supper fit for a king!
  - And he is the King of your house—
  - Bond Bread's delicious, home-made goodness isn't one bit too good for him!
  - The mothers of boys like him—they were the designers of Bond Bread.
- In their own kitchens, they baked loaves of home-made bread as models for Bond Bread.
- Then our baking experts took the best of these home-made loaves and copied their flavor and goodness into Bond Bread.
- That's why mothers insist on Bond Bread for their children.
