suffrage. No political party from the kingdom of Rumania was allowed to present candidates, thus leaving the political field entirely to the local parties. A number of Jews, Ukrainians and Poles were elected, but even these members of foreign races are advocates of union with Rumania.

of union with Rumania.

The victory of the "unionists" at the elections is largely due to the democratic policy pursued by the Rumanian authorities in Bessarabia and to the energy with which they have taken in hand the economic restoration of the country. When the Rumanian army first entered Bessarabia in the darkent hour entered Bessarabia—in the darkest hour of defeat and German invasion—it was regarded in many quarters as a possible menace to the democratic liberties which the country had just won for itself out of the chaos of the Russian empire's collapse.

In the beginning the Rumanian military authorities, like all military authorities when invested with political power, made grave malakes in their power, made grave instakes in their treatment of the population, but the Bucharest government, which itself soon underwent a healthful democratic transformation, remedied these blunders in time by introducing radical reforms which rapidly convinced the people that union with Rumania involved no danger of reactionary rule.

Agrarian Reform Is Popular

Foremost among the democratic measpropriation of the great landowners who had oppressed and exploited the peasants under the old Russian administration. Some extremists, bewildered by revolutionary developments in Russia. demanded that all estates should be divided among the peasants without any compensation to their former owners. The Rumanian Government rejected this Bolshevik plan and fixed adequate rates of compensation, but the land will in future belong to the peasants. This agrarian reform has already proved a sovereign remedy against ism and at the same time it has cemented the union between the Rumanian dynasty and the masses of the people The Bessarabian peasants have be-stowed upon King Ferdinand the title of "the peasant's king," by which he is now popularly known all over the country to his new subjects:

Another successful democratic measure is the administrative decentralization of Bessarabia, which was estab-lished by the "act of union" of April 9, 1918. Until this time a military high commissioner had been at the head of the administration. Today the country is administrated by a special min-ister for Bessarabia, assisted by six directors of departments for internal affairs, justice, commerce, education, finance and police.

A Step Toward Autonomy This administration virtually amounts to an autonomous government, and it is, indeed, a first step toward full Bessarabian autonomy within the limits of union with the mother country. Finally, full political equality of all ever may be their nationality or re-ligion. Government offices and munici-pal councils are full of non-Rumanians. Many of these are Jews.

Contrary to the general belief, there is no feeling of hostility among Ruanians against the Jewish religion-The devout peasants cross themselves when passing in front of a synagogue just as they do in front of their own churches, for to them all places of prayer and devotion are equally houses of God. It is as profiteers, not as ad-

Little Attention Being Paid to Stock Dividend Tax or Anything Else

It is a question in the Street whether the possibility of taxing stock dividends, which is being discussed in Washington by Treasury officials and the House ways and means committee, is having any influence on the stock market or not.

A well-known broker said that up to the present he carried.

the present he cannot see it has had the slightest effect, because practically everyone has concluded that these dis-cussions in Washington will end in talk. He said that he believed the agitation would be kept up, that it eventually would affect the market, and he would not be surprised one of these days to find that the proposal to place a flat tax of 15 per cent on stock dividends, in the shape of a stamp tax, so as to been carried through

There are many of the opinion that such a tax would be valid and about a many who think the other way, he said. No one, he added, can say what Congress, and especially the present one will do.

If, he continued, the ways and means committee should recommend a tax on stock dividends not as income, all stock issues would have to be taxed whether issues as dividends or not, and this would be very far-reaching, but in the end it might prove to be an effective end it might prove to be an effective barrier to the issues of fake issues, many of which are floating around by
