

SWARTHMORE MAN BACK FROM SERBIA

Former U. of P. Professor Says Armenian Girls Are Afraid to Leave Turkish Harems

MANY HAVE BEEN SLAIN

New York, March 22.—Armenian girls in Turkish harems are afraid to leave their captors because many who fled from the Turks have been massacred, according to John Dunaway, of Swarthmore, Pa., who reached here today after fourteen months' service with the Near East relief committee.

The British feel, he said, that Turkish resentment might flare into a Moslem war in India.

The Armenian population in general, Mr. Dunaway continued, are still in a precarious condition. The Turks still control their police and local governments, he said, while a new Turkish alliance with the Arabs threatens further massacres.

Mr. Dunaway, who was formerly an instructor at the University of Pennsylvania, arrived here with twelve other relief workers on the French liner Savoie from Havre.

The Swarthmore man said he was inspector of relief work in Serbia and several times interviewed Prince Alexander, the Serbian regent, on the progress of the work.

Alexander, he said, showed deep appreciation of American help.

Ends Life With Corset Stay

Anna J. Busson, thirty-nine years old, 3102 G street, died late yesterday in the Friends' Hospital, Frankford, as the result of a strange attempt to end her life in the institution. According to Dr. Alfred C. Buckley, the woman tried to force a corset stay down her throat. She was suffering from melancholia.
