

The Streets of Life

By HAZEL DEVO BATCHELOR
(Copyright, 1919, by Public Ledger Co.)

Jim Carter, in a fit of rage against little Anne, his daughter, drives his wife out of the house.

ANNE, left to herself, crept sobbingly upstairs and crouched by the window. She was terrified. Something horrible was going to happen about the old house where it was. One side the little night sounds were audible all around and overhead the big sky spread in an arch of stars that somehow did not seem comforting, but very cold and far away and big, beyond Anne's comprehension.

She crouched there she did not know how long until she heard voices coming up from the orchard. When suddenly appeared, followed by Aunt Martha and another man who carried a lantern. Her father carried a still form and suddenly Anne knew that it was her mother. She sprang up from the window, her legs and feet crept swiftly downstairs. She reached the kitchen just as her father laid the still form down on the old-fashioned sofa. Water had dripped from her mother's clothes all over the kitchen floor and Anne, even in her childish agony, thought suddenly of Aunt Martha's anger at the fact that her kitchen was getting all wet. That thought, however, was swallowed up as she came up to where they were standing and she saw her mother's still white face on the pillow.

"Father," she wailed, childishly. Her father turned on her.

"You get out of here, do you hear me?" he shouted. "You see what you've done. Your mother's dead."

It was a brutal thing to do to a child. It was cruel enough to tell her that her mother was dead, but to tell her that it was her fault was fiendish. It was horrible.

She put forth a timid hand to touch that dear still face, and her father pushed her away. Aunt Martha came forward then and took her upstairs to bed. Somewhere in that grim heart there was pity for the child, pity for the shivering small feet, and regret for the part she had played in the treatment of Anne. She tucked the bedclothes around the trembling little body and made her go to sleep, but Anne lay shivering and awake. It was nearly dawn when she fell into a dazed and uneasy sleep. Her long exposure at the window the night before had done its work, and she tossed and moaned on her pillow for days after that awful night, parched with fever, fighting for her life.

She cried constantly for her mother, and Aunt Martha, when her father told her the night before had done its work, said very little, her father nothing at all. When Anne finally woke up one morning to the sunshine sprawling over the bed, and was herself but very weak, her mother had been sleeping for nearly three weeks in the little country graveyard nearby.

Jim Carter was a stranger now, an outsider, and he and Martha, although they never said anything about it to each other, drew closer together in consequence. They had been waiting for Anne to get well before leaving the long gray farmhouse. They would move away somewhere else where they weren't known. The pasture and farm land about the old house were of the best. There would be no trouble in getting rid of the place and at a good profit. So when Anne, on that sunshiny morning, awoke to consciousness and fell to sobbing weekly, her head buried in the pillows, she did not care very much one way or another when Aunt Martha told her that they were going away.

All that day Anne thought of her lovely mother and that awful night when she had screamed and run out into the night. When night came she shivered and put her head under the bedclothes. There was something dreadful to her in the darkness and yet she dreaded to ask Aunt Martha to leave kind to her these days, but neither was she tender. It was not in her nature to be. As for Jim Carter he never went near Anne. He had no feeling for the child save that he was as determined as ever to bring her up without her mother's weakness. He still felt that his wife had been a weakling. Her very failure to face life had proved that. Jim Carter had become more silent, and brooded more than ever. He brooded over the fact that, due to his wife's mad act, he had to give up his farm and move away. He blamed Alice dead for everything, just as he had always blamed her for everything while she lived.

Tomorrow, The Carters Move to Greenville.

Summer's Loveliest Dresses Are Now in the Planning and a few are in the making—this we know by the number of people who have bought and commented upon these lovely organdies.

Organdies

Picture the sheer Spring loveliness of fine organdie in a cool apple green! Or the clear beauty of orchid, the deep flush of rose and the prettiest shades of pink, light blue, Copenhagen, Chinese blue, canary, etc.

40 inches wide at 60c a yard to 45 inches wide at $1.50. Dainty self-tone checked organdies are 29 inches wide at $1 a yard and 36 inches wide at $1.25.

Beautiful Flowered Organdie

Almost unbelievably fine and sheer, the white or delicately pink grounds are strewn with delightful clusters of flowers, and it takes very little imagination to see the charming, quaint frocks that will easily be evolved.

46 inches wide, $2.75 a yard.

(Central)

Men's Fine English Caps, $2.50

(Ordinarily they would be considerably more)

From Redleaf, London, in a smart, one-piece style and in mighty good-looking patterns and colorings—herringbones, diagonals and overplaids in Spring greens, grays, browns, etc. Every cap is well made and lined with silk serge. They're just right for golf, motoring and Spring hikes on country roads.

(Gallery, Market)

Men's Neckties at 85c

New and good looking—the kind that men like to buy for themselves or don't mind having women get, as the patterns and colors are all "a man's sort," and one can't make a mistake.

Open-end four-in-hands in the newest stripes, figures, etc.—that tells the story!

Men's Woven Madras Shirts at $2.35

The price is special and the shirts are splendid value—plenty of blue and black stripes as well as green, tan and lavender in various widths.

The shirts are tailored in the Wanamaker way, have soft turn-back cuffs and separate collars to match.

(Gallery, Market)

Between Spring and Summer Hats Are Venturesome and Gay

Not yet arrived at the soft, lazy grace of Summer and not fully done with the keen, bright newness of Spring, hats evolve new modes and a becomingness that is delightful.

A large hat of vivid green taffeta is somewhat softened in outline by haircloth, which overlays the top of the brim and whose fringe extends beyond the edge, making a halo.

Lacquered straw is much in vogue, the hat that is sketched combining lacquered navy straw and white silk.

Leghorns, too, are peeping out in all their grace, adorned with flowers and velvet.

And, altogether, many are the hats of charm and distinction at $12.50 and $15.

(Market)

Silk Pongee Blouses

Of good quality natural color silk pongee, they are all made with the becoming Peter Pan collars and long or elbow sleeves. Special at $5.

Frilled Georgette Blouses, $7.50

A dainty style with a pointed frill forming the collar and continuing half-way down the front comes in white, flesh, peach and beige.

(Market)

Practical Umbrellas for Men and Women, $3.50

The covers are of tape-edge American taffeta (cotton) over durable frames. The handles for women are short, in curved or plain mission styles, with silk wrist cords. Men's umbrellas have crook handles of plain or carved mission wood.

(Central)

A Summery Array of Couch Hammocks

Inexpensive, Durable and Ornamental $12.75 to $45

At $12.75, khaki-color hammocks are comfortable and have good springs.

Khaki or gray couch hammocks are $16.50 and $18.50, and a good-looking striped hammock is $35.

Most striking and attractive are the well-fitted couch hammocks at $45. They are of heavy duck in stripes of blue and gray, green and tan or in two shades of green.

Cushions to match are $4 each and awnings $15.

Among the Many Points which make these couch hammocks superior to most is one that people who have had hammocks before will appreciate. The mattresses are filled with cotton-and-fiber and will not absorb the moisture the way all-cotton would do.

The springs have been dipped in enamel and baked and will not readily rust—another good point.

(Central)

Colored Marquisette 40c and 60c a yard

Simulating fine colored madras, it is in a great variety of colors and patterns, some of the most lovely in shades of blue and gray, or touched with black. 36 inches wide.

Lustrous madras in green, gold or rose, 40 inches wide, is quite a find at $2 a yard.

Nothing prettier for summer draperies!
