THREE years ago William S. Hart conceived the idea for a western story. He was confident that it would story. He was confident that it would make the greatest motionpicture of his make the greatest motionpicture of his career. But Mr. Hart would not attempt the filming of the story until he tempt the filming of the story until he could put into it the full expenditure of time, money and care that it deserved. Now that the western star is served. Now that the western star is making his own productions, it was natural that he should start producing his until the making his own productions, it was natural that he should start producing his until the making his own productions, it was natural that he should start producing his unit of David Graham Phillips's novel making his own productions, it was natural that he should start producing his own story as a photoplay. Great Italian Baritone Scores Success at the Metropolitan Opera House Concert

Evidently instructed by what he had failed to do at his first concert of the season at the Metropolitan Opera House, Titra Ruffo, the great Italian baritone, gave his second recital last evening before an audience not especially friendly at first, but which warmed up to a high degree of enthusiasm by the close of the program.

Assisted by two artists of unquestioned rank, Mr. Ruffo gave one of the best recitals of the year. He gave the two numbers in which he especially excels, the Prologue from "I Pagliacci" and the great buffo baritone song. "Largo al Factotum" from "The Barber of Seville." He was fine in the first, but incest tiple in the last. Mr. Raffo is above all a dramatic singer, despite his obvious fondness for Italian lyrics in a planer key and a contemplative, not nor key and a contemplative, not

The selection from "The Barber" was a veritable masterpiece of enunciation and exquisite tonal quality, and attellitor a desire to hear Mr. Ruffo as Figare with, say, Caruse as Count Al-maviva, Mardenes as Don Basillo and Malatesta as Doctor Bartholdo, How-ever, this is among the operatic imever, this is among the operation in possibilities; they might get it in New York, but in Philadelphia—never.

Next to this selection, which, it must be said, showed some diversity of opin-ion as to tempo and other mechanical the Prologue from "Pagliacei" was the event of the evening. It came at the opening of the program and was, theresomewhat unfortunately placed. but was given with a roundness of tone and beauty of singing that placed it high among the concert offerings of the present season. Mr. Ruffe was in fine voice throughout the entire concert, and as he warmed to his audience and the audience warmed to him, a procedure necessary after the flasco of the first concert, it became a triumph of vocal and dramatic singing. CEDAR—"His House in Order," with Elsie Ferguson, Monday and Tuesday; "The Copperhead," with Llonel Barrymore, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday; "Too Much Johnson," with Bryant Washburn, Saturday.

COLISEUM—"His House in Order, with Elsie Ferguson, Monday and Tuesday; "Desert Gold," with F. K. Lincoln, Wednesday and Thursday; "Alarm Clock Andy," with Charles Ray, Friday and Saturday.

BELMONT—"The Imp." with Elsie Janis. "Easy to Get," with Marguerite Clark, last half.

RIVOLI—"Strenger Than Denth," with main soloists of the evening. They reartist as Ruffo and played and sang, respectively, as though they were the main soloists of the evening. They received many recalls and Miss Perini was obliged to repeat the "Tarantelle" of Rossini, although it was by no means the finest bit of artistic singing which she did during the evening, and Mr. Rubinstein had to respond with encores to every number after the first.

> Into the Limelight Over Night Stage favorites are often made over-night. Edith Day jumped into the lime-light in "Irene" upon its first night in New York. Just so with demure Doris Arden, who plays Claire in "Fifty-Fifty" at the Opera House, She was an overnight sensation and all by accident -at least opportunity and accidentbecause they both combined to place Miss Arden in the front rank of pres-Miss Arden may be classed as one dis covery of the present season in musical comedy realms.

A. H. WOODS Gives Philadelphia Another Screaming Sensation!

The town has gone mad over this smart and saucy play of a lady's lingerie.

Everybody is talking and laughing about it. The critics wrote columns of praise about it. No space for quotations. Go and see for yourself. It will split your sides and rip your gloves. Take another head along—you're apt to laugh your old one off.
