Nancy Wynne Goes to See the Tableaux at the Bellevue-Stratford—She Tells of a Pretty Frock She Has Seen—Concert Today

I DO not ask to see anything other than the tableaux yesterday at the Bellevue-Stratford, in which the beaux and belles of future generations appeared in exact copies of Jessie Willcox Smith's Dickens illustrations.

The Runaway Pair, who were Peter Dorie and Gaius Roberts, were too dandied for words. Gaius, you see, indulged in looking offside and it was therefore hard for Peter to dry his eyes, so as the curtains were about to close he just reached up and yanked her head into position.

Then Mrs. Knowlton and her four small daughters were so beautiful that the audience was perfectly wild, and how could one expect said four small Knowltons in their white frocks and blue sashes and dainty pantaloons to keep their heads so what it was all about and what they looked around and one had quite a time keeping her small feet quiet.

Most of the others kept pretty still and "Little Emily," standing on her narrow plank with the wind blowing her skirts and hair and the wonderful coloring of background and frock, was a remarkable picture. She was little "Brook."

One of the cutest copies was called "The First Party." Evidently some of the four small tots who had practiced the role of picture queen, stood out upon their little feet, so was Leopold Siffert, Jr., proceeded to eat his ice cream delightfully, while a small girl climbed her sweetie from the back of the picture, and the other two were of the pictures was the copy of the Madonna which Miss Smith had painted and presented to the Hope Day Nursery school, and the other two were of the pictures was the copy of the Madonna which Miss Smith had painted and presented to the Hope Day Nursery school, and the other two were of the pictures was the copy of the Madonna which Miss Smith had painted and presented to the Hope Day Nursery school.

AND in the evening there was the Little Symphony and Adolph Bolm with his ballet at the Academy. I must say I was absolutely charmed with that affair, too. The variety of the costumes, the grace and the exquisite music made it a most remarkable performance. It was given for the benefit of the Children's Hospital.

I SAW Sarah Penrose at the theatre the other night, and she is the first to see a scene in the new very short sleeve in a dark dress to whom such a frock is becoming. (Involved and complicated remark, but it's true.) Usually these short sleeves are cut at the long place, even by the best dressmakers; that is, the wrong place for the wearer's arm. Some arms are not pretty, you know. But this brown frock with such a neckline, which was trimmed with knitted ruffling was as pretty as could be and most becoming. She had a small brown hat of hand-made straw, trimmed with rather dark French flowers, and that coloring which her soft light brown hair and dark eyes was most effective.

I UNDERSTAND the concert to be given this afternoon at the New Century Drawing Room will be very interesting. The best part of it is that it is given by the students of the Philadelphia School for Christian Workers; you know, young girls who are preparing for social and religious work. It is under the auspices of the Presbyterian church, and besides the pupils of the school, who are singing, several of Miss Barry's private pupils will add to the pleasure of the afternoon by singing and playing the violin. Elizabeth Dorr, who is the daughter of Samuel Lovell's granddaughters, will sing, and so will Rachel Whitmer, while Miss Grace will play the violin.

Some of the women interested in the concert are Mrs. Louis F. Benson, Mrs. W. W. Porter, Mrs. William Clotier, Mrs. Samuel Hebbner, Mrs. Samuel Clotier, Handl, Mrs. Alexander MacCall, Mrs. Perry Allen and a number of others.

I HEARD such a darling little story about a wee two-year-old, and it all happened lately, so I must tell it to you. Little Two Year Old spent a few weeks with his grandparents while their mother was sick in the hospital. He and his nurse occupied the room adjoining "Granddaddy's." The most enjoyable part of the day was the "rough housing" early in the morning, and Granddaddy's whistle was the signal for it. "I want, 'Come on in, I'm ready.'"
