Nancy Wynne Talks of the Musical Talents of Several Young Philadelphians-She Hears the Saturday Teas at the the Merion C. C. Begin This Week

A ND now what do you think Polly her hair. Yes, and she looks just as pretty as a small witch. I saw her at the opera the other night with five swains standing round in wrapt atten-tion. She was wearing a black velvet low-cut frock and her white and pink our frock and her white and pink our frock and her white and pink afternoon at the concert which was given at the home of Mrs. Henry La Barre Jayne. And with all her going out this winter, she evidently has in on way neglected her great talent. That young person plays like a dream, and loves it as well as she plays. She has studied out in St. Paul every sum-mer and has gone to New York each week for special lessons, and been out. Dolly Duane seems to have a decided fran Polly Thayer, and her sister tool of the belles of the season as well. To thig the Goulin and her sister too or developed, but it gives great promises she played at the Jaynes", too, and Frances MeCollin and her sister Kath-erine sang them. erine sang them. I do think that Miss McCollin is so I do think that Miss McCollin is so sweet. I saw her in the car the other evening going home from the opera. And I thought what an example of pa-tience and submission she is! Blund all her life! But her mind is full of music and must be a beautiful thing! She was smilling to herself and humming parts of the opera. It is wonderful what those who do not see can do. And abe. I understand has never known the she, I understand, has never known the light at all. But she has been given an unusual musical talent and it has been fully developed for her. Some of her son for going? But won't it give the men a beautiful chance to talk? They just love nothing better on earth than "running" us women on the subject of not being able to keep quiet.

HAVE you heard that in Mansfield. England, the wife of Bishop Hos-kyne is trying to introduce "silent teas"? Perhaps it has to do with some sort of silent hour. I heard about it vesterday and that a great many women had gone to a recent meeting of the Mothers' Union in England just to see if they could keep silence. Did you ever? Goodness knows, a tea is usually a bore anyhow, and if one cannot talk at one what on earth would be the rea-son for going?

THEY are getting up several concerts and afternoon teas at the Merion Cricket Club this spring. There has not been much social life in any of the clubs for the members, as there was before the war. This spring the women members of the Merion have decided to pack to their delightful afternoon go back to their delightful afternoon teas, for several Saturday afternoons anyhow; and the first one will be held this week. PHILADELPHIA WOMEN ARE ALREADY EXPRESSING THEIR ENTHUSIASTIC AP-PRECIATION OF THE GOOD TASTE AND ECONOMICAL DISCERNMENT SHOWN BY PAULETTE IN HER SHOPPING TOURS THROUGH THIS STREET OF UNSUR-PASSED MERCHANDISE. ARE YOU SHOPPING WITH HER?

Beautiful beyond description are the garments to be found in that "Paris Shop of America," J. M. Gidding's, located in the Ritz-Carlton at Broad and Chestnut streets. All that the heart of fashionable woman could desire in the way of apparel is here found. I was particularly entranced by the luxurious Gidding capes and wraps and I went from one to the other with ever-increasing delight. There was an old-blue silk duvetyn richly but conservatively embroidered in old-blue silk, a black duvetyn embroidered in copper, an odd stone-colored cape of glorified burlap, another of dove-gray silk duvetyn, a model of black tricolette, and, oh, such a beauty-a summer evening cape of orchid pink silk (a sort of La France pink with little lavender lights in it) having a broad collar composed entirely of little up-standing, picoted loops of the silk-so that milady will look for all the world as though she were peeping out of a rose.

I invariably rejoice when I find a shop which has really worth-while fashions for large women. As you know, many of the current styles they could wear becomingly if only the manufacturers would make such fashions in the larger sizes or the shops would be thoughtful enough to carry them. Now, Benguyer's, that pleasing little shop at 1214 Walnut, is noted for its exceptionally smart garments for the younger set and the average woman, so that many folk don't know that it gives special attention to the appropriate gowning of the larger woman. Some of the smartest garments in its shop are in sizes 401% to 501%-those half sizes are so satisfactory, too! You should see these pretty, somet something distinctive, something ultra-fashionable!-that which you find in Fre De youthful, and graceful fashions for large women-in tricotine, foulard, taffeta, meteor, voile, serge, etc. Plumpness and extra size need no longer be a worry. once you visit Benguyer's. These large sizes range in price from $55 to $125.

Smart men are enthusiastically appreciating that very high-class suit of genuine Donegal tweed which the superior and new department of custom tailoring established by Van Horn is offering at $85, a considerable number of dollars less. I happen to know, than other equally high-class establishments are offering such perfect tailoring and wonderful material-there is a core of shades and weaves of that marvelous Donegal tweed from which to choose, so that a man will not greet himself coming round that proverbial corner.

Van Horns, as you probably know, have for years been the leading bal masque and theatrical costumers in America, and now, with their very complete organization of master tailors and highest quality imported materials, I strongly suspect they have determined to live up to their old reputation in this new department--and at nonexorbitant prices, too. You will find them at 921 Walnut street.

Sterling's, at 1210 Chestnut street, is a shop I like to talk about, because of their fine attitude during the war. You see, they made uniforms for all war organizations at actual cost, from the suits for yeo girls to the uniforms for the Emergency Aid. And whenever there is a city "drive" for a good cause Sterling's are invariably among the first merchants to offer a helping hand. For example, they have had one Bryn Mawr Day for the endow-ment fund, upon which they gave 10% of their total sales. I was minded to tell you this little story of good deeds because I have just discovered still another fact to this good shop's credit, that they give 5% discount, all the time, to students and professional people generally. Sterling's custom tailoring has the highest reputation among fashionables, you know, and their ready-made suits and frocks are splendid, though reasonably priced.

It is like going to Paris itself for a bonnet to enter that wonderful millinery salon of Chertak's, 1229 Walnut street. There this noted designer and importer has assembled a group of the most exclusive and at the same time beautiful models possible for creative sartorial genius to conceive. There are models whose simplicity is their charm, others whose luxury restrained by good taste is irresistible, all so "different" in mode, so exquisite in materials and perfect in workmanship, that with a single bonnet one becomes a Chertak devotee for the rest of one's sartorial life.

And, by the way, those wonderful Wenger furs, the hest the world produces, can be had just one flight up from the millinery salon. Besides displaying the most luxurious summer furs in the city, Mr. Wenger is now taking advance orders for next winter's furs at prices much lower than the winter season itself will command. A word to the wise-for economy.

If you are in search of one of those smart, embroidered tricotine suits in just the right shade of navy, you will want to look at those which the shop of Louis Stone Co., at 1306 Walnut street, is offering at, the reduced price of $75 instead of $95. There are several attractive models at this price. One, a conservatively cut coat with a notched collar, has a beautiful hand-embroidered band, about ten inches in depth, which forms both a finish to the jacket and two inconspicuous pockets. It is a conservatively smart suit. You will approve it. The skirt is straight in line and just the desirable width for both comfort and fashion.

This shop is constantly offering garments at inviting prices-many of them specially marked in consistency with their new close-price policy.
