HINGES ON AMERICA

No Liquor Soon if Law Holds,
Otherwise Rum for 100 Years,
"Pussyfoot" Asserts

LAUGHS GREET REMARKS

A Few Thoughts of
"Pussyfoot" Johnson

"When I got mixed up in a riot in London and lost an eye, I was merely enjoying myself."

"If America waffles in her prohibition the world will be wet for another hundred years."

"As soon as Ireland controls its own affairs she will chase the rum shops out of the country."

"If you want to find rum twenty years from now you will have to look in the dictionary."

land, known as the "local veto" movement in that country, said Mr. Johnson, is gaining ground steadily. If progress keeps up its present pace, he added, Scotland may be free of the liquor traffic within a year.

So far as Ireland was concerned, "Pussyfoot" said that twenty-three of the twenty-six Parliament members from Ulster were pledged to prohibition.

"As soon as Ireland controls its own affairs," he declared, "she will chase the rumshops out of the country, no matter what form her government is to take."

In that connection, Mr. Johnson said the Sinn Feiners were total abstinence—perhaps more from caution than from principle.

Unless America stands firmly on its feet for prohibition, the world will be wet for another 100 years.

William E. (Pussyfoot) Johnson, advocate of an arid world, made this statement last night in an address at the Academy of Music. Mr. Johnson, who gained international fame when mobbed by students in London while campaigning for prohibition, was cordially received.

Despite his der subject, the speaker managed to arouse no end of laughs with his effervescent philosophy and snappy epigrams.

A ripple of laughter ran through the auditorium when Mr. Johnson predicted that Scotland would be one of the first European countries to follow America's example and devote itself henceforth to "sober without."

Chuckles again were heard when the speaker said that Ireland would be next as "All Sinn Feiners are abstainers, if for no other reason than that a drunken Irishman cannot keep a secret." However, the audience seemed to laugh in spite of itself, for both statements were cordially applauded.

"Pussyfoot" Wins His Audience

Introduced by Warner B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, as "the greatest fighter who ever stood in shoe leather," Mr. Johnson was given an ovation. The audience arose and cheered him.

"And 'Pussyfoot' immediately won his listeners by saying:

"When I got mixed up in a certain riot in London, in which I played the star part and lost an eye, I was merely enjoying myself."

Mr. Johnson at once sweeps aside any preconceived picture of the "reformer" or "blue stocking" that may be in the mind of those who are to meet him. He is a big, sturdy, broad-shouldered man, looking for all the world more like a brewer than like a prohibitionist. About fifty-eight years old, bald headed, spectacled and with a short, bushy moustache, dressed in a well-cut business suit, walking quickly and emphasizing his words with short, snappy gestures, he creates the impression of an eminently practical man, rather than of a dreamer or an idealist.

The glass eye which has taken the place of the one sacrificed on the altar of temperance gives his face a strange expression. For, while the good eye winks and smiles, the big, round artificial one stares as if fixed upon the future. And Mr. Johnson says that with that eye he can "see" things that are as a closed book to his real eye.

No "Pussyfoot" in Speech

Mr. Johnson by no means lives up to his nickname—which he has come to regard as an honor title—so far as his manner of speech is concerned. "Pussyfooting" is as foreign to him as the liquor habit. As a matter of fact, some of his hearers agreed that his language was the one thing connected with prohibition possessing a powerful "kick" that had come to their attention.

"Pussyfoot," first of all, told of his work in Europe and, particularly, of what he and his associates accomplished at the Peace Conference. Then he launched into a picture of a future world, in which "rum" will be found only in dictionaries.

"The modest results of our work thus far," he said, "show what we can do with larger means and larger equipment. Since October 1 more than 2000 prohibition meetings have been held in Great Britain, and in each of them the American Anti-Saloon League took part. The world is looking to America to banish liquor everywhere for all time. I repeat the words of a high member of the British Government:

"If America makes good—if she enforces the law—the world will be dry within ten years. If she waffles, the world will be wet for another 100 years."

AT CIRCUS, HOME BURNS

Man and Wife Had Planned to Visit Seashore Today

While Jacob Rosenfeld and his wife were at the circus last night, their home at 2641 South Darien street was damaged by fire at 9 o'clock.

The blaze started in the cellar and spread rapidly to the first floor. Neighbors banded together to help save some of the furniture, but had little success. The entire first floor was burned out, and the second badly damaged by smoke and water, before the fire was put out by firemen.

The Rosenfelds had intended leaving for Atlantic City today, but their plans were rudely upset. The loss is estimated at more than $1000.

SEES DANSEY-CASE ACTION

Prosecutor Promises to Dispose of Charges in Near Future

Atlantic City, May 14.—Edmund L. Gaskill, Jr., prosecutor for Atlantic county, whose failure to dispose of charges preferred last December against Charles H. White and Mrs. Edith Jones, in connection with the disappearance of "Billy" Dansey on October 8, 1919, is a subject of intense feeling in Hammonton, yesterday said he was preparing to move the case "soon."

"Does this mean that the matter is to be disposed of finally in a short time?" the prosecutor was asked.

"As I said before, the cause is to be presented as soon as we are in a position to act," Mr. Gaskill responded.

"Will the case be laid before the May grand jury?" the prosecutor was asked, in an endeavor to fix the time more specifically. The May grand jury is the third to be empaneled since the whole country joined in a feverish search for the five-year-old Hammonton boy, seven months ago.

"We hope to be in shape to present the matter in a reasonable time in the near future," the prosecutor replied.

As there are few important matters before the May grand jury, Mr. Gaskill probably will have to take up the Dansey matter within two weeks or let it go over for the grand jury to be called in October, just a year after "Billy" Dansey's fate became a national mystery.

Children Get Circus Party

One hundred children of the Tioga-Nictown district will be taken to the circus this afternoon by the Community Services Organization of that portion of the city. The tickets have been donated by Henry H. Hatfield, owner of the lot where the circus pitches its tents each year. The Tioga-Nictown organization is endeavoring to raise funds to equip a playground for the children of the community. The circus party is being planned for these children, first, to give them the pleasure of going to the show, and secondly, to draw attention of residents of the neighborhood to the need for the playground. Mrs. Charles W. Malotte, of 3817 North Seventeenth street, is in charge.
