Nancy Wynne Tells of the Plans for "Once in a Blue Moon"-She Speaks of Some Smart Clothes Recently Noted-Other Bits of Talk

BECAUSE there was a typographical day I want to straighten my readers by explaining that the Mathilde Saportas who is to be married in New York to David Trumbull Lanman Van Buren on June 9 is the daughter of Mr. George A. Saportas by his first marriage. Her mother is Mrs. Renia Brown Saportas and she lives at Bonny Brook, Saratogs. The marriage is of interest here because Mr. Saportas, who was dishecause Mr. Saportas by his first wife, Mathilde's mether, married Betty Sinnickson, of this city, a daughter of Mr. Charles Sinnickson, three summers ago. The tygraphical error and the leaving out of a line of type made it appear that the mother of the bride of June 9 was Miss Sinnickson.

AND now I am going to tell you all

He thought to himself, "That's just the kind of a coat that Mary (his wife) has been wanting." Then he turned to his paper and did not look about again till the train stopped at a junction for passengers to change to a waiting train for another direction. He noticed that the women stoke, collected their bags and things and went out and was just about to take to his reading again when he saw the coat hanging there.

He jumped to his feet, grabbed it up and rushed from the car just in time to see the junction train starting off, A porter happened to be on the back platform, so the gallant man threw the coat to him, saying, "Those ladies left, and so it is and the ladies of the ladies of the ladies," "Yes, indeed," said our hero. "I saw it just after those ladies left, and so it is much to the porter, telling him to give it to them."

"What!" cried the conductor, "Why, they just moved to other chairs in the heat Pullman."

Of course, after innumerable telegrams the woman got her coat again, but could you blame the gallant hero for leaving to the tender mercies of the man and sald, "Sir," "Yes, indeed," said our hero. ## MISS DOROTHY YALE WEDS TEMPLE OF NIPPUR JEWELS LISTED ON ANCIENT TABLET

Curator of Babylonian Section of University Museum Translates Record Describing Treasures Such as Once Bedecked Royal Beauties of Egypt and Babylon

Many daughters of kings, in those days of polygamy, were given in marriage to allied monarchs and all were dowered with gold and jewels. Egypt and Babylon commonly exchanged daughters in this way. If the recipient had no daughter to send back he was expected to send her worth in gold. One Babylonian king complained that Egypt sent him short weight and was quite angry about it.

In the days of the University Museum tablet, fourteenth century, B. C., the king was Nazi-Maruttash, of whom we read in the Tell-el-Amaruat tablets, when Jerusalem complained of pressure from the north and sought the aid
