The Truth About Bill Snyder

Anne Carter has from childhood been beset by heredity. She has inherited her mother's sweet yielding disposition, but her father, who was determined to crush out any indication of vanity in the girl's nature, has forgotten that Anne might have inherited his own strong will. When it came to a matter of forcing her to marry the man she detested, and depriving her of the one woman friend who had brought any beauty into the girl's life, Anne defied her father. The influence of her sordid life, however, has left its mark, and she has decided that happiness with the man she loves is not for her.

"LUCY PRATT." Anne repeated the name after the girl. It had a familiar sound, as though she had heard it before, and yet she could not rememher. Then suddenly it came to her. Lucy Pratt was the girl whose name had been whispered in the village as having been connected with scandal of some ties to go to the seniors of this year's lices being conducted at his church under thing with Aunt Martha about it, and her own interest amd curiosity. for."
Lucy Pratt pulled away quickly from Anne's touch, and defiance hardened her small features. "I can say what I have to say right here," she said quickly. "It's about Bill Snyder. You're going to marry him, aren't you?"
Anne shook her head. "No, I'm not going to marry him."
"He told me you were."
Anne smiled. "And I tell you I'm not."

The girl hesitated a moment, stand-ing first on one foot and then on an-other as though uncertain as to whether or not she should go or. Finally she burst out: "I told him last night that burst out: "I told him last night that I was coming to see you, that I was going to tell you the truth, and he laughed at me, he thought I wouldn't dare. He thought I would always do just what he told me to, but that's over now forever." The girl's thin shoulders began to shake and she began to sob wildly.

began to shake and she began to sob wildly.

Anne put an arm about her.

"Don't cry. tell me about it if it will make you feel better."

"You know when it happened," the girl said, after a moment trying to conquer her sobs. "Nearly three years ago. He told me he loved me and we were going to be married. I believed him. I would have believed anything he told me then. And then he went away, and when I wrote to him, he laughed at me and told me not to be a little fool. Even then I loved him," she said flercely. "Because there wasn't any one else, and then he told me about you. He said that you weren't easy like I was, that a man had to work to make an impression on you and that he was going to marry you."

There was a sound of steps on the

There was a sound of steps on the porch outside, and a moment later the door opened and Jim Carter appeared. Lucy Pratt had fallen back against the wall. Anne stood calmly facing her father, "Well, what's all this?" he said gruffly.

Lucy, who was slightly behind Jim Carter, signed frantically for Ame to keep silent, and Anne nodded comprehensively.

"Just some one who brought a message to me, father," she said, stepping forward and opening the door for Lucy. Jim Carter grunted and went on into the dining room where he always sat in preference to the parlor, and for a moment the two girls stood facing each other.

"And you're not going to marry him."
Lucy said, softly. "Dop't you care for him?" A feeling of utter loathing swept over nne. "Care for him," she said and huddered. "How can you ask me shuddered. "How can you ask me that?"

There was a softness on Lucy Pratt's face. It rounded out the thin outline of her cheeks, and made her almost bretty. Anne looked at her in amazenent. This girl still cared for Bill Snyder. In spite of all that he had done; in spite of his taunting, his decention, and his cruelty, she still loved him. It was incredible.
Lucy lifted her head high and smiled wistfully. "I don't mind if you tell him I was here," she said. "He knew I was coming, and it's just as well to have him know I kept my word."
Anne could have cried, there was so much of hopelessness in the girl's voice, and she was so resigned. "Thank you for coming." Anne said, impulsively, and Lucy smiled again and was gone into the gathering dusk of the summer evening.

Anne turned ami went into the house to meet her father.
