"Alas, you hear what El Murfa, the robber, says. You must become his bride."
"Nay, father. I am pledged to Prince Bashur. I am to be his alone." And Astara placed her hand in that of her lover. "You must defend me against this robber."
"How can I defend you?" groaned her father. "Our walls are strong and could never be battered down; but we have nothing to eat. We would starve to death in a week."
"I bring you fat beeves, I bring you fat sheep. I bring you a hundred sacks of wheat," cried the robber El Murfa, from the other side of the gate. "All this will I give to Raban the Greedy for his daughter. And in token of my love for her I give her this rug."

Over the castle wall the robber threw

Over the castle wall the robber threw the rug of Peggy's mother. Peggy thought it very cheeky of El Murfa to give away a rug that didn't belong to him, but she was very glad to see it again and hoped the fair Astara would restore it to her. As for Whiffa, the guardian of the rug he was nowhere in sight.

n sight.
The eyes of Raban the Greedy lighted up when El Murfa spoke of the fat beeves and sheep and the sacks of wheat. He looked at his daughter and her lover.
"This robber, El Murfa, is rich, wouldn't make a bad son-in-law,"

GIMBEL, BROTHERS

For Thursday

Philadelphia, June 2, 1920.

The wastefulness of careless returning goods is being curtailed. But for a concern to say: "No returns; no refunds"-is the same as saying "otherwise you would not keep our bargains." The Gimbel Store is an institution of service; not mere money

Thursday is "Subway Store Day" at Gimbels

The best efforts of more than two hundred buyers, matching the markets to gather goods advantageously, is reflected in these is to hold average profits low and to attract a greater and greater occasional super-value days.

No store can exist without profits, but the Gimbel system volume of business. Gimbels lead in value-giving.
