BODY IS PLANNED

Intermediate Bureau Discussed to Direct Clean-Up of Vice on River Front

WOULD AID POLICE WORK

A plan to establish in Southeast Philadelphia a law enforcement bureau which will be the practical agency of co-operation between the allied social service workers of the city and the police department for the suppression of vice and disorder, is under discussion by a committee representing different settlement organizations and churches. The committee has already waited on Superintendent of Police Mills with regard to this and other projects for the improvement of conditions in the southeastern part of the city and has been assured of his co-operation. The conclusion that the only possible remedy for the situation which now exists in the city's "Limehouse" is the establishment of an effective intermediate agency between the police and the social service workers has been reached after years of study and experience on the part of representatives of the various settlement houses, churches and general civic welfare bodies which are active in the downtown district.

Proposed Plan Sole Hope
"The plan now proposed is the only hope of permanently effective measures to meet the problem," said the Rev. Percy R. Stockman, rector of the Old Swedes' Church, Swanson and Chestnut streets, who is active in social service work and thoroughly familiar with life in the riverfront district. "Neither the social service forces nor the police department can successfully clean up South Philadelphia alone," he declared today, "but the co-operation of the two in a law-enforcement bureau like the one now proposed would show quick and permanent results for betterment. The value of coalition between the social service agencies and the city and federal departments was discovered during the war. The success of that co-operation gave the clue to the present plan which aims at a more permanent joining of forces which should be of even greater value in the life of the city. The plan as it now stands is to have a law-enforcement bureau that will have supervision over that part of the city lying between the two rivers and south of Market street."

Will Be Clearing House
"Broadly speaking, this bureau will be a clearing house for information and a source of investigation that would result in two things—the police would be furnished with a thorough knowledge of conditions from the points of view of trained social service experts, and the welfare workers would have the support which their activity deserves and must necessarily have to be fully effective. The bureau would have a paid executive at its head, who would be the connecting link between the facts of the downtown case and the active measures necessary to change them. It would probably be necessary to have a staff of investigators and possibly the service could originate action on its own initiative. The development of such an organization to its greatest usefulness would require time and an annual budget of from $5000 to $10,000. But it is the only possible way of meeting the whole situation."

Tragic Life, He Says
"It is a tragic thing that so much of this young life should have to turn its natural gaiety and desire for happiness into the ways of dance halls and liquor clubs and their attendant debauchery. The different social service organizations are doing their best to give these young people something else. They are alive to the fight for a fair deal for the boys and girls that must be carried on in South Philadelphia. When the people of the city as a whole awake to the same facts there will be a change, and the facts are right before them today."

The committee of representatives of the welfare and social service organizations and the churches will meet at the Neighborhood Center, Fifth and Bainbridge streets, at 10:30 Tuesday morning. Miss Margaret Faulconer, head of the Reed street neighborhood house, is chairman of the committee.
