and won't that be fine? Mrs. Royster's friends are very many, and will be so glad to welcome her back.

You remember she married Tom Royster during the war, when he was unable to come home for her. So she bravely sailed away to the Virgin Islands by herself, and was married to him there. They have been stationed at St. Croix for nearly two years, though they have been home for one wisit.

Mrs. Royster is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Borda, of Jenkintown, and a sister of Mrs. Harold Cross and of Edith and Eugenia Borda. There and of Edith and Fugerin and a series also a number of brothers in the family. You remember Helen took up nursing in the Abington Hospital shortly before our entry into the war. But she was rather delicate in those days, and was obliged to give up her tudies before graduating.

OPEAKING of Jenkintown reminds me of Rita Sturgis, who was married there two weeks ago. I hear that she and her husband, who is Nigel she and her husband, who is Nigel Cholmeley-Jones, are visiting the Gilder in Lenox, Mass., for a part of their wedding trip. Dick Gilder was one of the ushers at their wedding, you remember. Mrs. Sturgis, who spends the spring and fall at Laburnums, the old Sharpless place in Chelten Hills, is going this week to Maine, where she will be the guest of her aunt, Miss Van Russe, at her summer home at Small Buren, at her summer home at Small Point, during July.

T SAW Mrs. Henry Rittenhouse on I SAW Mrs. Henry Rittenhouse on Chestnut street one day last week. She was looking awfully well. I have always thought her such an attractive and extremely capable woman. She was looking very pretty in a dark blue crepe de chine dress trimmed with pipings of cream, or rather pale tan pongee. A strip of the tan went down the middle of the back of the frock, which was a one-piece affair held in at the waist with a narrow belt of blue. A small, blue straw hat was trimmed with waist with a hat was trimmed with flat quillings of blue ribbon. Mrs. Rittenhouse's little daugnter, who was with her, were a Mary Ellen dress of tan and white, and a mushroom hat of

ONE day last week Mother was moving out to the country and was very pressed for time. The trunks had not come yet and the maids had not arrived, and it was getting toward 4 o'clock. So taking Elsie, aged eight, to the window, she pointed out the meat-shop, which could be seen a short disshop, which could be seen a short distance away in the village, and told her to go with her little sister, buy a shoulder of lamb and bring it back with her.

Very important, the two little girls started forth, but halfway to the shop Elsie suddenly asked Ethel, "What did mother say, 'a shoulder of leg'?"

"Why, no." said Ethel, "I think she said 'a leg of shoulder"." "What shall we do?" asked Elsie. And slowly they continued on their way, arguing and we do?" asked Eisie. And slowly they continued on their way, arguing and arguing. Finally they decided thusly: "I." said Elsie, "will go in and say, 'Please let me have a shoulder of leg, and you speak up quickly and say, 'Oh, no, it was a leg of shoulder that mother wanted,' and then we'll be sure to be right." So they practiced and practiced, and when they got to the store wanted,' and then we'll be sure to be right." So they practiced and practiced, and when they got to the store they walked fearfully in.

Up spoke Elsie to the attentive butcher. "I want—er—a shoulder of leg," said she. "Oh, no, Elsie," piped up Ethel. "it was a leg of shoulder mother wanted." The butcher looked from one small girl to the other, and then he smiled and took a shoulder of lamb from the icebox and said, "This is what you want."

PERHAPS you don't believe it possible to buy a suit of tropical weight material such as hat-box-one of those good looking black enameled hat-boxes such as I saw at the store of Geo. wearing at present. But Jacob Reed's Sons, 1424-26 Chestnut Street, are showing suits of these and other light-weight materials in for it adds immensely to one hat, B. For a longer trip, of course, they are practically indispensable. These hat occes are attractively lined with cretonnes and have forms dark colors as well as in the lighter over which the hats are to be placed Some have pockets at the sides and on the inner side of the lid into which small articles can be tucked.

UXURIOUSLY soft and silken of pile and rich in color are the Chinese rugs which Fritz & La Rue, Inc., 1615 Chestnut Street, are displaying this week in their window. Particularly lovely find at Hallowell's are California are the three rugs with background of mandarin rose. These are in convenient room sizes, and are destined to lend much dignity to the rooms which they will grace. There is another rug with background in that shade of blue which the Chinese love to use, and a smaller rug with ground of imperial yellow and lotus flower motifs surrounding the cen-tral medallion. Chinese rugs are the accepted floor coverings for use with furniture of the Adam, Sheraton and Chippendale periods, and these rugs are particularly interest ing in design and coloring.

PORTUNATE, indeed, is the bride who numbers among her wedding gifts a silver tea or dinner service from the store of Bailey, Banks & Biddle Company. There seems to be an infinite variety of graceful patterns from which to choose. The "Fairfax" is a most interesting design, with something in its lines reminiscent of the era of silver buckles and soft lace frills. The "Grosvenor" tea service is classic in line, with an Adam urn topping the lld of its teapot and a cameo-like medallion. I saw at Bailey's, too, a charming after-dinner epifee service, which included coffee-pot, sugar, creamer and tray. It was surprisingly inexpensive, and would make a really succeptable gift.
