In more games than baseball. Patterson won the British tennis championship at Wimbledon and was then defeated by Johnston at Forest Hills.

Johnston, playing at Wimbledon, was beaten in his second match by the veteran Parke. Which recalls the fact that McLoughlin lost to Wilding by a wide margin at Wimbledon and a bit later defeated Wilding and Brookes at Forest Hills.

Coupled with Willard last July he drew in more than $450,000 for one appearance at Toledo.

Coupled with Carpentier now he would be good for more than $500,000.

Many of these might deposit the ring-side tax in the hope of seeing Dempsey knocked three-cornered, but they would be there just the same.

CARPENTIER, as possessor of the European heavyweight title, would secured a few minutes' rest. The Frenchman, in meeting Dempsey, would be almost an equal card with the champion. His general popularity is much greater, but he doesn't hold the Carpentier could play to a tremendous house in tackling any good heavy-weight, but as long as the title was not at stake the receipts would be well below a championship meeting.

The Third Selection

THE third selection rigs out more of a problem. "Babe" Ruth is undoubtedly the greatest turnstile favorite that baseball has ever known. In the last two seasons more people have paid the toll to see Ruth than any, even Cobb, ever lured to the stands in the same length of time.

Davies came into prominence in the early 80s as manager of Dan O'Leary, the champion walker. He afterward took over the management of Peter Jackson, over the management of Peter Jackson, colored heavyweight champion, and under Davies direction Jackson fought a draw with James Corbett, lasting sixty rounds.

Davies put Jackson in the title role of an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company with Joe Choynski as his sparring part-
