When we come to measure what has been accomplished in the time, it seems much longer than one hundred and forty-four years since the birth of our nation, since Liberty sent forth her gladsome sound throughout the land, and the mountains and valleys breathed the atmosphere of priceless freedom.

The time seems short, indeed, as we number among our friends and acquaintances hoary heads that indicate three score years and ten, and whose immediate forebears heard the bell we love so well peal forth the notes that announced our nation's birth.

May our land continue to be a mecca to the oppressed, a beacon light to those still in darkness until this entire orb be bathed in Liberty's sunlight and "man to man his brother be."
