POLICE AND OTHERS OUT OF POLITICS; RISES IN PAY

Water and Fire Systems Improved—Contractors' Grip Is Broken

By GEORGE NOX McCAIN
The first six months of the administration of Mayor Moore are now a matter of history. It is a history that has been made in the open and before the eyes of all the people.

In view of the conditions under which the Mayor came into power it is both interesting and illuminating.

With the massed opposition of a powerful combine arrayed against him, with a city Council operating on the narrowest majority possible—and often opposing his plans and propositions—a review of the achievements of his administration as seen by himself is a mightily interesting feat of the current of municipal official life.

"The outstanding political as well as economic feature of the present administration," said the Mayor, "was that the grip of the old contractor machine was broken at the outset. We shall hear less and less of it as the months and years go by.

City Jobholders Out of Politics
"Another, and I think it is one of the crowning achievements of the past half year, is that the policemen, firemen and other officeholders are out of politics. Of course, it was a mandate of the new charter, but in this respect have been obeyed. As a result, no political assessments were levied during the last campaign upon any of these men.

The Mayor took up the matter of his pre-election promise to policemen and firemen in regard to increased wages. He had fixed $5 a day as a minimum, but the condition of the city finances, a legacy from the preceding Vane-Smith administration, would not permit of the additional expenditure.

The policemen are now receiving $4.35 a day flat, instead of the old $3.50 a day with a $70 bonus. The latter has been eliminated.

"If a policeman goes on the retired list his pension is now computed at $4.35 instead of $3.50 a day, which is quite an item in the aggregate," explained the Mayor, "and I am pledged to $5 a day pay for these faithful city employees and in the new budget that amount will be included."

An entirely new municipal enterprise from which I expect the most advantageous results is the municipal asphalt plant. It will save the city money and will facilitate the rapid repair of our streets.

Wilson Sees "Conquering Purpose" in His Party

Auditorium, San Francisco, July 3.—(By A. P.)—President Wilson's reply to the message of appreciation sent by the Democratic National Convention was received today. It follows:

"It was with the most grateful appreciation that I received the message transmitted by you. It is a source of profound pride with me to receive such an evidence of the confidence of the great party which derived its principles direct and unadorned from the founders of the republic who promised the world the counsel and leadership of the free people of the United States in all matters that affected human liberty and the justice of law.

"That promise was deliberately renewed when we entered the great war for human freedom and we now keep faith with those who died in Flanders fields to redeem it.

"That I should have been accorded leadership in such great matters fills my heart with gratitude and pride and the course the party has taken fills me with a perfect confidence that it will go from victory to victory until the true traditions of the republic are vindicated and the world convinced not only of our strength and powers, but of our integrity and our devotion to the highest ideals.

"This is a conquering party and nothing can defeat it.

"WOODROW WILSON."

BOTH MATCHES FOUR SETS

Wimbledon, England, July 3.—William T. Tilden, of Germantown, Pa., won the annual British lawn tennis championship here today, defeating Gerald L. Patterson, of Australia, in the challenge round. The score was 6-2, 6-3, 6-2, 6-4.

C. S. Garland, of Pittsburgh, and Norris Williams, 2d, of Boston, won the final in the doubles by defeating A. R. F. Kingscott and J. C. Mackay, of the British Davis Cup team. The Americans took three of the four sets played. The score was 4-6, 6-4, 7-5, 6-2.

Match With Brookes
The final in the women's doubles championship was won by Mlle. Lenglen and Miss Ryan, of California. They beat Mrs. Lambert Chambers and Mrs. Tilden in straight sets, 6-4, 6-0, 6-2.

Tilden's victory, while officially giving the winner the British championship, also carries with it the world's tennis championship.

Tilden has the right to play today by successfully working his way through the large field from the preliminary round.

A great throng crowded around the central court today long before the classic match was scheduled to begin.

Tilden revived an old injury in his leg in one of his recent matches, but this morning appeared to be in perfect trim and the injury to his leg did not prevent him from playing at top speed.

Tilden's game attracted more favorable comment in England during the last week than that of any lawn tennis player that ever stepped on British turf. Beamish, Love and others are of the opinion that he is the best player in the world.

FINE ON 4TH—AND 5TH!

Grand and Glorious Is Holiday Weather Forecast

Come on in, the weather's fine! It will remain fine tomorrow and Monday, clear through the July Fourth holidays.

This was the joyous announcement made today by George Bliss, Philadelphia's forecaster.

"Go to it," he said. "The weather's going to be fine for picnics and every odd sort of high jinks. Great stuff."

"Pleasant, like today, is to be fair with pleasant breezes that will make the mercury budge.

And Monday probably will be one of those gold and blue days—azure skies, friendly sunshine, not too warm—just right!

The temperature at 2 o'clock this afternoon was 80.

Washington predictions for next week are: North and Middle Atlantic states—Generally fair, although local showers are probable about Tuesday and toward the end of the week. Temperatures will average above normal over the interior districts.

Bold Bid for Progressive Votes Explains Platform and Appointment of Colby to Cabinet. Party Ignores Old Dogmas

By DAVID E. SMILEY
Editorial comment on the Democratic platform telegraphed from San Francisco by the editor of the Evening Public Ledger

San Francisco, July 3.—The Democratic platform is a bold bid for the progressive vote. It is an invitation to every liberal in the country to come into the party ranks. In many respects it is likely to become historic for its departures from traditional conservatism and the stolid reactionarism of the solid South.

Topic after topic reveals this fact. Nobody familiar with the course of the Democratic party since the Civil War can read the platform adopted after three days and nights of travail and strain in committee, and four hours of stormy debate on the floor, without recognizing the effort to turn the eyes of the party from sectionalism of the past toward a broader national and international vision of the future.

The reason for President Wilson's unprecedented and at the time puzzling appointment of Bainbridge Colby as secretary of state now becomes clear. While it was suspected as a move to placate the men who had followed and shouted progressivism with Colby in 1912 and 1916, it was not expected that he would be such a potent factor in dictating policies this year. Perhaps "dictating" is too strong a word to describe Colby's part here, and "influencing" would be better. But whether he is responsible primarily or as agent for President Wilson, there is no doubt about the outcome.

Long Progressive Strides
Who would have predicted a few years back, or even last year, that the

ROBBER FLEES IN AUTO

A masked automobile bandit entered the saloon of Frank Beck, at the northern corner of Broad street and Hunting Park avenue, shortly after midnight. The bandit shot and killed the bartender, and wounded another man who had been attracted by the sound of the shooting.

Three shots were fired at Beck, but all went wild.

The midnight marauder, who entered the saloon alone, dashed out into the rain after the shooting, and jumped into an automobile, described by the police as a "dirty, dark car, without a top," and sped away. Two or three accomplices are said to have been waiting in the machine while the masked bandit was in the saloon.

The bandit got no money.

The murdered bartender was Charles Glathorn, thirty-eight years old, 4225 North Strydenham street. He was shot through the forehead and left shoulder. He was dead when taken to St. Luke's Hospital in the patrol wagon of the Greenmount avenue and Lycoming street station.

Alexander Peoples, thirty-three years old, 1359 Jerome street, is the other victim of the bandit. He was shot in the left knee and is undergoing treatment in St. Luke's.

Peoples heard the shots at his home a block away. He became curious and started to investigate. He ran up Broad street to Hunting Park avenue and halted in the middle of the street near a lamp-post to observe a Ford automobile. While he was standing there one of the men in the automobile, believed to have been the bandit who did the shooting in the saloon, turned his revolver on Peoples and shot him in the knee.

Peoples did not know he was hit until sometime later when he felt blood trickling down his leg.

Have Good Description of Man

The police have a good description of the bandit whose daring attempt to "stick up" one of the most popular and frequented places in the northern section of the city frankly amazes them.

The bandit is described as a man about five feet eight inches tall, wearing dark clothes, soft hat and a dark mask when he entered the saloon.

In each of his hands was a .45-caliber automatic revolver.

"Throw up your hands, all of you. Get behind the bar," said the masked person to those in the place.

"There was a scramble for a minute. The bandit was watching everybody closely. Finally he must have thought of something."

M'ADOO SUPPORT WAS AFRAID, HIS ENEMIES SCARED

Leaders of Both Sides Happy Over Adjournment After Two Futile Ballots

FIRE HAS BEEN STARTED UNDER MITCHELL PALMER

Pennsylvanian, Forced Into Anti-Administration Ranks, Shows Weakness Early

By CLINTON W. GILBERT
Copyright, 1920, by Public Ledger Co.

San Francisco, July 3.—Picking of the Democratic candidate for President went on in conference at the hotels last night. The convention adjourned suddenly after two ballots at 9 o'clock in order to give the leaders a chance to reach an agreement. The leaders wanted this chance.

The motion to adjourn after the second ballot came from the anti-McAdoo group, Mr. Fitzgerald, of New York, making it.

But Mr. McAdoo's supporters did not oppose it. They evidently did not have the confidence in their own strength to go ahead and force the voting during the night until a nomination was made or a deadlock reached.

Both Sides Lacked Confidence
Nor did the other side show any greater confidence. If they had felt sure of stopping McAdoo they would have had two or three more ballots to prove to the leading candidate that he could not gain, and then would have called for an adjournment to pick a substitute for him.

As matters stood the opposition leaders were afraid and the McAdoo supporters did not dare. And although the roar of noise easily exceeded the beat of axes when Mr. Fitzgerald's motion to adjourn was put, Chairman Robinson's ruling that the axes had it brought no protests.

No one asked for a rollcall. Every one hurried away from the ten-hour session to give the leaders time to make terms with McAdoo or agree upon plans to defeat him.

Moral Advantage With McAdoo
The moral advantage of the two early ballots was with McAdoo. He proved stronger in the first voting than had been expected and his opponents weaker. He led the field, the rather large field, of Democratic candidates on both ballots. The vote of the three leaders on the first ballot was: McAdoo, 296; Palmer, 256; Cox, 134; and on the second, McAdoo, 289; Palmer, 264; Cox, 159. It had been expected that Palmer would develop about 300 votes and lead on the first two and perhaps even on the first three ballots.

But McAdoo's stepping at once into first place as a candidate meant little or nothing. He disclosed no strength that was not known to be his; his vote merely coming to him a little sooner than was expected.

Afraid to Fight It Out
It did not inspire his managers with such confidence that they wanted to fight it out at once.

The leaders of the opposition say that they can see only 100 more votes for McAdoo than he got on the second ballot, but they were not ready to demonstrate his limits by having two or three more ballots.

If they could have shown last night that McAdoo, after four or five ballots, had less than 400 votes they might have adjourned with confidence of picking some other candidate than he in the night's conference.

And the truth is that neither they nor the McAdoo people felt at all sure, though the latter are in the stronger position.

McAdoo Administration's Man
The McAdoo supporters had, during the night, several lines of approach

MAYS APOLOGIZES; CASE IS CLOSED

By ROBERT W. MAXWELL
The great argument, entitled Hayes vs. Mays, has been settled.

Carl Mays, of New York, met Bryan Hayes, of Philadelphia, in a one-round talking contest this afternoon and at the end it was the consensus of opinion that it was a good draw.

The battle by rounds follows: Mays was first to enter the ring, which was pitched in Connie Mack's private office in Shibe Park. He looked the picture of health and said he had trained faithfully for the event. He was seconded by Miller Huggins and Sam Crane, of New York.

Five minutes later Bryan Hayes made his appearance. He had just come in off the road and Billy Richardson, the referee, acted as guide and pacemaker. Hayes was seconded by Bader, mayor of Atlantic City, and Lawyer Somers, who looks after legal affairs.

This was the setting for the public apology to be made by Mays in private because on Decoration Day, 1919, Carl threw a baseball into the crowded grandstand and bounced off the head of an innocent spectator who happened to be in the line to investigate. "He threw a baseball into the crowd and shattered and then Hayes decided to swear out a warrant. This was done as a result Mays did not appear here any more. When the club made its customary visit to Philadelphia to take a vacation because if he didn't he had a swell chance to learn all about the interior decorations in the housework."

Time passed as only time can pass and Bryan Hayes, who is a fair-minded sportsman, said he would offer everything off if Mays would apologize. That brings us back to their corners smiling.

Both men left their corners smiling. Referee Richardson said a few words, which consisted of the following: "Everybody makes a mistake some time in his life, but when that happens the only thing to do is find the man whom you have imposed upon, shake hands and say you are sorry; that's what he is to be done today. Mr. Mays, have you ever met Mr. Hayes without a baseball in your hand?"

"No, sir," replied Mr. Mays politely.

"Then shake hands and make a speech," continued Richardson.

"They shook hands and stepped back a great way," said Mays, "and I made a mistake," said Mays, "and I was very sorry. I threw the ball in the heat of passion and now I want to apologize to Mr. Hayes."

"It is a generous thing for Mr. Hayes to do in dropping the case against me and I want to say I am grateful."

Hayes then led off and finished with this: "I accept your apology, Mr. Mays, and from now on the incident is closed."

After which everybody in the room shook hands with each other and the great case, entitled Hayes vs. Mays, passed into history.

Right after the handshaking Mays went out and started to throw baseballs, but not at Mr. Hayes. He pitched the first game for the Yanks against our A's.

McADOO SPENDS DAY AT HOME

Huntington, N. Y., July 3.—(By A. P.)—William Gibbs McAdoo, after remaining in bed until long past the hour at which he usually rises, this morning announced his intention of spending the day at his home here. Mr. McAdoo manifested little interest in what the San Francisco convention had done during the night, learning the results of the two first ballots from the morning papers. He had retired last night before the first vote was announced.

Slow in Starting

The chiefs of the McAdoo, Palmer and Cox forces conferred constantly throughout the night and during the early morning almost up to the hour of the meeting of the convention. At 9:30 o'clock, the hour set for reconvening, the emptiness of the convention hall reflected the sleeplessness of the night for leaders and delegates, for all were slow in arriving.

Despite that it was the last day of the convention, if plans did not miscarry and every one was trying to speed up, it was a slow start. The band organ filled in during the wait.

And the favorite air for the band seemed to be "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles." Every one of the enthusiasts seemed to feel that the air was particularly appropriate for the other fellow. There certainly was a crop of bubbles being blown in the convention for somebody, but nobody was wise enough to forecast whose bubbles were going to burst today.

Conference After Conference

There was conference after conference on the floor as leaders and delegates came in, but apparently they were fruitless and to all outward evidences the convention stood exactly where it did at the close of the second ballot last night; there was not a man on the floor who could show any evidence to support his prediction of what was going to happen today.

At 9:45 o'clock Chairman Robinson was on the platform with others of the convention managers and the delegates' spaces were filled. The chairman then called the convention to order.

Before the roll call of the states was resumed, Chairman Cummings read to the convention a telegram from President Wilson.

The message predicted that the Democratic party would go from victory to victory and declared nothing could defeat its conquering purpose.

Just as Harding's name filled the air as the probable Republican nominee, three weeks ago this morning, on the final day of the Republican convention, so William G. McAdoo's appeared to be in the ascendency today with this difference that the Ohio candidate had been agreed upon by the elements in control of the situation at Chicago while

Broken-Hearted Mother Makes 4th of July Appeal

"Broken-hearted, I appeal to all mothers to warn their children against the danger in the careless use of fireworks."

This was the statement today of Mrs. Mary Leonetti, 2019 Millin street, whose seven-year-old daughter Irene, was burned to death when her clothing caught fire from a "burlesque" sparkler, June 29.

"I pray other mothers may profit by my experience," Mrs. Leonetti said. "Mothers, do not expose yourselves to the ordeal that I have had to undergo. I would be satisfied if I knew that from this appeal the life of one child would be saved, and if one mother were saved the sorrow, I have had to bear."
