GIRL APPLIES PSYCHOLOGY IN CHOOSING LAMP SHADES

Miss Gertrude Shearer, of Philadelphia Electric Company, Qualifies as Expert

For Ten Years She Has Been Educating Folk on Uses of Current in Homes

Every room has its own psychology, according to Miss Gertrude Shearer, lecturer for the Philadelphia Electric Co. Tenth and Chestnut streets, who for ten years has been educating folk on the uses of electricity. She has accomplished so much the company counts her as almost indispensable and gives her free rein to carry out her ideas.

MISS GERTRUDE SHEARER

"In these days, when maids are so scarce and electricity is so wonderful saving, but it is certainly true that men have their places of business fitted up in the latest, most approved methods, while their homes are most inefficient and old-fashioned. Business men are working in offices with every modern convenience that will lend itself to their accomplishment of the most work with the expenditure of the least labor. And women are bending over washes or kitchen sinks or stoves or swirling the dust from the floors with broom and carpet sweeper. I firmly believe that housework should be done automatically done as an office work. I also think that a woman should be as well trained for her home tasks as a man or woman is for business positions."

And Miss Shearer proves this in her attractive little apartment in West Philadelphia.

SHEILA KAYE SMITH'S TWO NEW NOVELS

Noted English Novelist Is Characteristic in "Four Roads" and "Tamarisk Town"

Sheila Kaye-Smith's stories are so much a part of the English countryside that those who read them can almost smell the fragrance of the drowsy June fields and the woody spice of quiet, winding lanes.

"Such a story is 'The Four Roads,' an admirable study of rustic character, in which the war plays a part that is vague and remote, but no less a tragedy because of its remoteness.

"The Four Roads" is a tale told of crude folk and of these rural scenes which dominates the book. The war shook Mrs. Sumpton to the very soul, and it struck at him through his chapel preacher, in the person of a young man whom the battlefield proved to be a pitiable creature.

There is a thread of love—the love of Mrs. Sumpton for her son, a love which is the only one that survives through the book, but it is largely subordinated to the vast and passionate love of Mrs. Sumpton for her son, a love which is the only one that survives through the book, but it is largely subordinated to the vast and passionate love of Mrs. Sumpton for her son.

"Tamarisk Town." There is music in the name and music in the tale, but the music in the tale has the cadenced and only cross-section of a great mission, were presented with Arab horses, Oriental rugs and costly gifts of all sorts; a fine mansion was placed on the hillside, and the young man, who had been a soldier, was made a gentleman.

Then enters the woman. Against his will she wins part of Monypenny's love, the other part remaining in the town. The woman who had been a soldier, was made a gentleman.

VIVID FIRST NOVEL

Virginia Woolf's "The Voyage Out" Has Unique and Graphic Qualities

"The Voyage Out" is a book whose very uniqueness is its own possible suspicion of redium. And it is written with vivid, graphic touches which are all the more remarkable for the fact that the author, Mrs. Virginia Woolf, is a woman.

The Novel of the New Woman

By Magdeleine Marx

This book has sent a thrill through the world. It has stirred people for a gospel and has been received by them as though they were thirsting for it.

THE WOMAN is being published simultaneously in almost every country. In France and elsewhere it is the subject of lectures and long essays by prominent professors.
