"Shep. my father, wagged his tail in approval of this plan, but Lady Ann, my mother, was a bit doubtful.

"Do you think little Phil can stay on your back when you are galloping as you would have to gallop to beat. Romany Rye?" she asked. "It takes a skilled rider to clims to a horse in such a race." would have to gailop to beat Romany Rve? she asked. It takes a skilled rider to cling to a horse in such a race. That was true. Only the older gypsy boys and gypsy men had ever ridden either Gray Prince and Romany Rye when they were running at racing speed. Red Peter himself always rode Romany Rye, while the best rider among the gypsy boys rode Gray Prince. Any lad that can stick on my back as little Phil did when he tumbled out of the tree and scared me into a fit can learn to ride me when I am going at my very swiftest in a race, neighed Gray Prince in answer to my mother. Til train him till he is the finest little boy rider in the world.

Phil would climb a tree, and Gray Prince would trot beneath the limbs. Down would come little Phil. a chubby, squirmy heap, but now he didn't frighten Gray Prince, and the horse was careful not to throw him off. Little Phil thought this was the finest kind of fun. He liked it particularly well when Gray Prince galloped through the woods and he had to hang on to the horse's mane with both hands to keep from tumbling to the ground. "Each day Gray Prince galloped just a little harder, and in this way little Phil became used to sticking on his back.
