The New Congress Hall

Do you know old Congress Hall, at Cape May? Perhaps your grandfather and grandmother went there on their wedding trip.

Well, you would hardly recognize it today in its new dress of fresh paint, and completely rejuvenated. After being closed for years, and "dead to the world," it has blossomed out again, looking fit to receive a new procession of brides.

And all so easily done, just because it was built of BRICK. Most of the old seaside hotels were mere wooden shells, always ready to be blown down or burned up; but Congress Hall, built of everlasting brick, stands as solid as the old light-house, and needs only a little brushing up to be as good as ever.

And as to its value today—see if you can get the owners to tell you what it is.

For appearance, comfort, safety, permanence, high-value, and low cost, get a good architect and build of common brick.
