Well. I am so crazy mad. Joe, that I all a taxi and we go home in that for 12.50 and they ain't a wordsaid all the way up except Jeanne bitin' her nalls and me starin' straightly and coldiy lead ahead. Once in our flat I closed he door and in a voice which cut like a razor, I demand a explanation. I got what I ordered. Joe!

First Jeanne tells me not to talk to ther like she was a ball player and take off my hat and stand up 'til she sits lown and when I have done all of that love I am in a trance, she tells me that

down and when I have done all of that like I am in a trance, she tells me that the movie director she had at her cause if I had stayed there another minute I would of most doubtless give him to supe in this picture for five berries a day and carfare. She says she thought it was only right that she oughta help pay the expenses of our home and she look the job and had saved all the money she got and didn't see a thing wrong with it. Everybody had been Well, Joe, I go temporarily nutty and who wouldn't—you never seen Jeanne—and I says I am perfectly capable of supportin' a wife and I can steal what I am short if necessary, but whilst I am payin' the bills don't let her ever dare to do such a thing like that again. Well, Joe, it goes back and forth and back and forth and we ain't gettin' nowheres and fin'ly Jeanne busts out and says the makin's of a star and he will guarantee to put her over and her salary the first year will be 10,000 from men and that's more that I get. Joe, I start to rave again and she cuts me off coid and sharp and claims that she only supped in this picture to make me see that she was able to earn her own livin' and she don't really like workin' in the movies, but she does like her independence and all the French is like that, and if you don't believe it, ask Germany. Joe, she winds up by sayn' that either I cast about for somethin' and not a nickel off for cash, this guy
