DIEGEL PRAISED AS RAY WINS U.S. TITLE

Home-Bred Is Hero of Hour at Toledo for Nearly Stopping British Invasion

> By SANDY MeNIBLICK Toledo, Aug. 14.

TEO DIEGEL is the hero of the L hour in these parts. He was the home bred, who, knowing what he had to do, came close to stopping the British invasion for the open golf champiouship of the United States. They cheered him to the echo for his plucky try, and though he failed to deadlock the question by three grassy inches from the cup, every heart that saw that finish beat for him, every tongue sings his praise.

That Diegel alone will probably get all the acclamation is due more to force of circumstances, perhaps, than actual Ted Ray, ex-British champion, won medal play of 205 strokes.

Diegel, Jock Hutchison, Jack Burke and Harry Vardon were tied for the second low score with 206, one stroke removed from the deadlock that the first day's play had promised.

On both, He had a bird on either of the remaining holes to tie Ray, when he stuck his iron about eight feet from the cup on the seventeenth they hailed him on all sides as the new champion.

First Low Total

But it was Jack Burke, of St. Paul, withnown to the majority and not figured on by most to have a chance, who actually set the first low total. He had two wonderfully steady rounds in 725 yesterday and set the mark for the others to shoot at with his total of 296. He had trailed the leader by seven strokes at the end of the first day and swas entirely overlooked when all of the heavy favorites for the title were blanketed in the lead by two strokes. In the rush to watch the play of Vardon. Barnes, Hagen, Hutchison, Diegel and Ray the young Minnesota state open champion battled his way over the thirty-six holes unattended except by a scattered few who had a "hunch." friends who knew his caliber. Somehow, it looked as though that 296 would be beaten easily by the favorites still out. And so it was that Burke played his low round for the day of 144 without the wild huzzahs, the frantle cheering, the strained eagerness and the excited comment of the surging gallery.

Barnes Inaccurate

Barnes's failure to win the title after all his efforts was due to the fact, those who followed him throughout said, to the unusual inaccuracy of his shots. In the afternoon for instance his drives were generally in the edge of the rough, not where it hert his second particularly for a lie, but he just didn't have the shot from the fairway, time after time. Then his usual long iron lacked that "uncanny nose" for the opening. He left himself short or was over, or else he had a long try for his two putts. Barnes, on the golf he can play, is nearly always good for better than a 76 or 77, the scores he played yesterday.

Diegel played a beautiful pitch to the short thirteenth, where Ray had a three just before, and the tense-nerved home-bred had a chance for a bird two.

He studied the line as closely as Diegel teld him how to make the putt and advised as best he could.

Diegel missed that chance by a hair and soon after that the occurrence happened that seemed to spell his ruin. He had made a fine drive to the fourteenth and was lining up the long brassic shot when suddenly a person, whose name will not be used for the pity of it, broke through the dense gallery, slid under Diegel turned angrily, threw his brassie on the ground and cried "Leave me alone, will you? I don't care what he gets, I'm trying to play my own game, not his," Then he grabbed his brassie and licked a wide fade which was long but kicked into a trap. His out was still short of the green, his tourth four feet from the cup, and while they fromed in unison he even missed his five, He was short of the fifteenth with an iron as at the sixteenth and got fives

More miles for less money

In dollars and cents, quality gasoline always goes farther. That's what quality means in gasoline-more miles for less money.

And the work power of quality gasoline is the least of its money-saving advantages. It materially reduces carbonthe great enemy of motors that causes the wear and tear that shoots up repair bills.

Test gasoline on the basis of how many miles it works per dollar, for that is the only simple, certain test of quality, and you'll discover how much less you pay for Crew Levick gasoline per mile.
