CONCENTRATION KEY TO TENNIS SUCCESS

World's Champion Makes Garland-Tilden Match Big Hit in Fairmount Park by Talk to Crowd and Great Playing

DEFEATS GARLAND

By SPICK HALL CONCENTRATION is the key to success in lawn tennis, according to Bill Tilden, the world's singles champion. Not only that but he states that any one can become, not just a good player, but a real high-grade performer on the courts if he or she will concentrate on the game and learn the fundamentals. Tilden made these statements and several others yesterday afternoon to 5000 tennis fans who gathered around the championship courts at Strawberry Mansion in Fairmount Park, where he played Charles S. Garland, another member of the United States Davis Cup team and also the world's doubles champion with R. N.

An hour before Tilden and Garland were scheduled to have their match all of the seats around the two courts were occupied and the overflow crowded around those sitting to get a glimpse of the famous Philadelphian. When Bill arrived arrayed in his Wimbledon arrived arrayed in his Wimbledon sweater, he was greeted with roars of applause which lasted several minutes. Bill looked a little fussed but he smiled broadly as he stepped out on the court to say a few words to the crowd. There were people lined up on four sides of the two courts, yet Tilden made an excellent speech and one which everybody could hear.

'Concentration is the cardinal principle of tennis success," said the cham-pion. "I am sure that any one who wishes to play tennis seriously can do so wishes to play tennis seriously can do so if he or she concentrates and gets the fundamentals of the game. That is the first thing. The next is to keep the eye on the ball at all times. This rule, of course, is one of the fundamentals of all athletics, but it is even more essential in tennis than in any other branch of sports. Another important thing is learn to make your stroke correctly, and the main thin gin that is to always hit the ball when the body is at right angles to the net. That is the only accurate position that can be assumed and is absolutely necessary for success.

"Another thing that must be done is to learn how to grip the racquet. This is done by holding the racquet face on at right angles to the ground with the left hand and then shaking hands with Tilden illustrated all of his points. He showed how small an angle the server has to get the ball into the opposerver has to get the ball into the oppo-site court even if he is a six-footer. He made this point to impress upon the fans how necessary it is to hit the ball at as great height as possible in making the delivery. He also explained the foot-fault rule in a way that could not be mistaken and he illustrated a footfault and the correct method of serving when following it to the net.

and the correct method of serving whole following it to the net.

After telling the thousands how to play tennis, Bill proceeded to show them and he did in a manner that was extremely impressive. He had Garland as his opponent in the singles and defeated his opponent in the singles and defeated his opponent in two sets at 6-4, 10-8. At first Garland did not get into the fray very well because he had just got off a train from Pittsburgh and had difficulty in getting used to the strong glare. Yesgetting used to the strong glare. Yesterday's match, by the way, was the first that either Tilden or Garland has played on dirt since before they left for Europe early in the summer. When that fact is considered their playing was wonderful, for the difference between playing on dirt and grass is so great that it takes the average men two or three weeks to get used to a change or three weeks to get used to a change from one to the oher.

Fast Doubles Match

After the singles match, Tilden and Carl Fischer, Cynwyd's star young left-hander, met Garland and Joe Thayer in doubles. Tilden and Fischer took the first set, 6-4. In the second set the count reached 6-all when the players decided to let the thirteenth game decide the set because Garland and Tilden had to catch an early train to New York, from where they go to Southampton to play in the doubles. Garland and Thayer took the deciding game, and the crowd dispersed, having seen the greatest exhibition of lawn tennis ever staged in Fairmount Park, Tilden's appearance in Fairmount Park means a great deal more than simply an exhibition of skill. It means that tennis here is being officially recognized as one of the major sports. The Park guards were on the job and everything was run in fine style, with Al Hoskins in the umpire's chair for the singles and Joseph M. Jennings, national tennis treasurer, official in the doubles. A force of competent linesmen also was present.

tonal tennis treasurer, official in the doubles. A force of competent linesmen also was present.

Tennis in the Park is certain to boom now after Tilden's exhibition. The tennis king has always been willing to help the game and the individuals learning. That was his reason for playing and talking in the Park.

It will be remembered that he consented to play as soon as he was asked, about an hour after he had landed in America from his great invasion of Europe. Shortly after having said that he would play in the Park he turned down the offers made by the Newport tournament committee to play there. This is an example of the caliber of Champion Bill. Can any one imagine Jack Dempsey or a great baseball player going out into the Park and helping out in the branch of sport in which they excel? Not exactly, unless there happened to be a large wad of greenbacks as an inducement.

Yet the champion of the world in tennis did this, and he will do it again and many times if he thinks that his presence in the Park will be beneficial to the development of the game in Philadelphia.

courts here today. Beekman deefated Alfred S. Dabney, of Boston, 6-4, 6-4, and Burdick proved too experienced for William Burrill, of Seattle, one of the younger tennis set on the Facific coast, and won by 6-2, 6-1.

Dabney made a promising start against Beekman, gaining an early lead of 4-2 through his accurate overhead smashing and spirited forward court play. Beekman tried to keep him away from the net by lobbing frequently, but Dabney was missing very few of them and Beekman had to resort to other tactics. He began to force the net himself and succeeded in reaching the forward court ahead of his opponent. There he blocked so well that Dabney was compelled to stay in deep court for the rest of the set. The Bostonian also started netting the ball too frequently for comfort, and Beekman won four games in a row for the set.

Moran Will Fling Either Reuther or Luque in Cincinnati

Cincinnati, O., Aug. 25. — Causey probably will try to stop the onrush of the Reds today, unless the altitudinous Eppa Jephtha Rixey, F. F. V., wishes to try his hand. Moran, thanks to his nerve in using a recruit pitcher Tuesday, gave his regular slingers a day of rest, and can come back with his choice of two or three, possibly Reuther, who lasted only a short time Monday and Possibly Luque, if the little Cuban's arm is better.

Yesterday's same wasn't so much in arm is better.

Yesterday's game wasn't so much in many ways but it will go down in history as the time when the outfielders did tremendous deeds. The catches made by Roush, Stengel and Meuselyes, and by Neale and Lebourveau as well—were things that are seldom seen and usually merely talked about. But for the outfielding, the twelve hits made off Bud Napier would have developed into at least seven runs and, again, but for the outfield work of the Phils, the Reds would have been scoring till after sundown.

Colonel Jacob Ruppert, of the kees, who attended a special meeting of the American League in Philadel-phia yesterday, where the proposal was given official sanction, would not indicate where the park would be located, but said three sites were under consideration. Tentative plans call for grandstands and bleachers capable of seating 60,000 persons, it was said.
