Reds Trim Phils Three in a Row. Eller's New Curve Fools Quakers

Cincinnati, O., Aug. 6. - Cactus Cravath's outfit, trimmed three in a row, will make a mighty stab at gathering one game before they depart from these precincts. Looks like Causey against Luque for today, and there will be much diversion. These two pitchers always sling the ball right at each other, a strong personal antipathy seeming to exist between them, and whenever they meet there is wild sport for the crowd, as each ducks and dodges the furious flings of the other geezer.

Wednesday's game was marked by much inadequacy on the part of the Phils when it came to hitting Hod Eller's new curve—his patented substitute for the shine ball. The Reds bunched hits when they were needed, and Hank O'Day bunched his decisions in deadly fashion. The Phils would have been beaten anyhow, but they assert that the score should have been only 3-1 not 5-1, and that two Red runs were the direct results of Uncle Henry's visual ideas upon the bases.

Large quantities of quiet marked the early innings. The visitors were the first to break the spell and put steelshod hoofs upon the platter. Meusel planked one in the fourth, with two catinct. Raps by Fletcher and Miller followed, Meusel getting around.
