OF PLACID

THRILLING story of love and lumberjacks set in the Adirondacks mountain country in its desperate, timber-cutting days. The author knows his mountain country as intimately as he loves it, and there breathes through the novel a passion for the pines and the snows, the hills and the valleys as pure and as stimulating as the winds that blow across Saranac and Placid. Robert Louis Stevenson appears as one of the characters, aiding Mac in his fight against tremendous odds for the delightful Hallie of the great hill country.

Professor McMaster has with pains-Professor McMaster has with painstaking care gathered information from all possible sources of what was done by the United States and in the United States in the prosecution of the war and in the negotiation of peace. The first volume published a year ago brought the ctory up to April, 1918. The second volume ends with the rejection of the treaty by the Senate in November, 1919. It contains the story magination which could devise wholly new grouping of the means at his com-mand instead of mere modifications of that which he saw in use already."

Sir Hiram was born in Maine, descendant of an old French Huguenot ty, Massachusetts, generations ago. Mr. Mottelay had the benefit of co-operation of Sir Hiram, who indeed dictated some jection of the treaty by the Senate in November, 1919. It contains the story of the fighting by American troops in France. Full details of the signing of the armistice are given, along with the story of the premature report that the armistice had been signed and how that report came to be sent out. It tells of the discussion in the Senate regarding the propriety of the visit of the President to Europe. The comment of the newspapers is freely quoted, not only on this but on many other of the material in explanation of cer-tain of his inventions, which included the automatic gun, smokeless powder, the electric lamp filament and various aeronautical devices. ment of the newspapers is freely quoted, not only on this but on many other matters. The history of the first publication of the text of the Versailles treaty is recounted and there is an exhaustive resume of the debates on the treaty in the Senate. REMINISCENCES OF A DIPLOMATIST'S WIFE

A Record of Experiences in London, Berlin, Bucharest and Constantinople

There is a charm about "From An Eastern Embassy" which is due to the very remarkable experience of the writer. Her name is not given, but she was the English wife of the French councillor of the Turkish embassy to Great Britain from 1886 to 1895, and then for ten "charming and interesting then for ten "charming and interesting years" to Germany. As the leading lady of the embassy she was present at every social function, and from her account of them one gets a vivid impression of many interesting people. Of Queen Victoria she says "her benevolent, motherly smile at the nervousness of debutantes, who were privileged to kiss her hand, has lived in the hearts of many who have now reached distant milestones of life." In the drawing rooms of the Victorian days "the map of the world seemed indicated in the various uniforms and national dresses."

Life in Berlin was very different, due Life in Berlin was very different, due especially to the growth of the mili-tary feeling and the arrogance of the military set. At that time twenty-five military set. At that time twenty-five German states were represented by legations in Berlin. The high standard of education, which was brought within the reach of rich and poor alike, impressed her. One of her summer holidays was spent in an eastere trip with her son, which included a visit to Bucharest, especially to meet the queen, well known under her pen name of "The House of Dreams-Come True" is, as its title suggests, a pleasant bit of light fiction which will thrill many a maid in her summer hammock. It was written by Margaret Pedler, and it was written well, in a form that approaches the melodramatic.

Jean Peterson falls in love with Blaise Tormarin, a handsome young Englishman who possesses ancestral estates and a high temper. Blaise, because of certain secrets in his past. there was more than one she noticed "that great affection existed between the powerful first wife, who represented authority and dignity, and the younger and he decides to put the past in the past and keep it there. This decision reached, the past rises abruptly and smites Blaise in the person of a wife he had thought was dead. Then, when all hope is lost, a way out opens in melodramatic style.

difference, but his love in hall trimphs authority and dignity, and the younger ones, who deferred to her opinion."

During a short trip in the Lebanon region she went to Baalbeck to see the ruins of the ancient temples of the sun-worshippers. "It gave me quite a shock to see an enormous bust of the German emperor fixed upon the wall German emperor fixed upon the wall of one of the most ancient and noble of the temples." On the sudden death of her husband she returned to England, and has much to tell of social life in London.

The Baroness Orcay has taken an episode in the life of Thomas Betterton, a distinguished London actor of the seventeenth century, as the subject for her latest novel, "His Majesty's Well-Beloved." It is the story of his love for Mary Saunderson, of the Duke's Theatre, and of the rough course which their love affair followed until it entered smooth waters. The story is told in the baroness' well-known vivacious style, with a wealth of incident and detail which give verisimilitude to it.

While our facilities for strictly high-grade refinishings are perhaps the most complete and largest to be found, the strain is keeping delivery promises is great; it will prove of great assistance if patrons who intend having their care refinished will inform us at their earliest convenience. Then dates can be arranged, so that care will not be out of use for any length of time. It was not to the convenience of the care of
