A QUIET NIGHT IN THE COUNTRY, OR HOW T. SPEAKER FOUND REST AND COMFORT IN OLD LOG CABIN

SOMETIMES, when the hard working business man Is beginning to show signs of cracking under the atrain, his friend and physician takes him to one side, hands him the parcel of friendly advice and ends up with: "Bill, old boy, better get out of town and take a rest. Go to the country where it is quiet and breathe same of that fresh, pure air."

It is the same with ball players, especially players who manake ball clubs, and now you have the reason for this stary. Sometimes one can find rest in the country - sometimes,

Chapter I

TRIS SPEAKER had just finished walloping the Ath -. leties and was about to leave the ball park last Friday night. / Walloping the Athletics was not an easy job, for after three attempts he had succeeded but once. Still, his ball club had put over a much needed victory and Tris was in a fairly happy frame of mind.

However, the manager did not look like an athlete "in the pink" nor was he a picture of robust health. He had lost one of his best friends, was under a terrible mental strain for more than a week and finally cracked. He had lost fifteen pounds in weight and looked as if he needed a long rest to recuperate.

Tris was standing near the exit, which is free at Shibe Park, looking over some mail which had been delivered by the guardian of the portal. A picture post card seemed to interest him strangely.

"If you want to win the American League pennant. read, "all you have to do is buy Everett Scott from the Red Sox.

On the other side of the card was a picture of the stional bank of Kekome. Ind. This may or may not have been suggestive.

While he was wondering whether or not to follow this rural advice, a friend stepped up. 'Hello, Spoke," said the friend. "How's things?"

'Not so good," was the weary reply, "Won a ball game today, but expect to win a lot of others before the season ends. This makes five victories out of the last seventeen starts. Guess we'll get started now, and do

SPOKE, said the friend, "you look all in. Why a-pood vest? I have a swell bangalow and it's just the place to spend a quiet night in the country. It will freshen you up for tomorrow's game and do you a world of good."

Chapter II

SPEAKER consented to spend a quiet night in the country and, accompanied by Walter McNichols, the washing secretary, and Smoky Joe Wood, who right fields and occasionally pitches for the Cleveland club, climbed into the well-uphoistered gasoline consumer which was leaning against the curb.

It was a pleasant trip through the park, Germantown, Chestnut Hill, Norristown and points north. The air was pure and aweet, and the san was easting a golden glow over the landscape before taking its final plunge in the west.

"I feel better already and I know I will have the first good night's rest in a week. It's great to get out country where it's nice and quiet.

After an hour s run, the host-chauffeur stopped the There was a sheepish look on his face as he turned is guests and said. 'I forgot all about a litrie change which must be

"However." he continued nervously as deep silence greeted his remarks, "I have a friend who has a place about a mile further up and we will stay there. He doesn't know we are coming but we are welcome."

Dense silence hung heavily around the car when the extemporaneous address ended abruptly. Neither Mr. Me-Nichols nor Mr. Wood commented on the change in the program, but settled back in the seat resigned to their fate. They were sure something was about to happen.

"IT'S ALL right," said Speaker, as the car rolled toward its new destination. "Any place will do, so long as it is in the country where it is quiet and we can get a good night's sleep. We are with you, but be sure it is a quiet place.

Oswald was not the owner, but pinch hitter for him. The wealthy proprietor was away on a business trip. "That makes no difference," said Oswald, by way of explanation. "Just make yourself at home and enjoy yourself. I am going away to a pinochle tournament and will not return until late."

The ball players and the dashing young secretary enjoyed themselves immensely. Then they retired to get as much quiet and pure air as possible. In the meantime, the host-chauffeur had excused himself to go to his own

OSWALD returned and he showed the effects of a tough pinochle tournament. He was a picture of happiness in 1916, which was before the birth of the nineteenth amendment. He dazzled all beholders with the brilliancy with which he was lighted.

First he remembered some new phonograph records and played them. Then he caroled some recent songs which he partially remembered. By this time his guests were wide awake and stepped out to have a look.

"Ain't this a swell place?" asked Oswald. "So quiet you could commit murder and no one would know it. The strangers looked at one another in nervous amazement. In the meantime, the pinch hitting host had put on another record and left the room.

'Guess he's gone,' said Speaker. "He didn't mean The sound of a knife being sharpened rudely inter-
