The U. S. submarine S-5, crippled and wedged nose-down on the ocean floor Wednesday, fifty-five miles off Cape Henlopen, Delaware, was lost and again recovered early this morning by the battleship Ohio, a few hours after the big fighter had dragged the smaller craft from the sand and sea grass on the bottom.

The submersible, in which the thirty-seven officers and enlisted men had been sealed up for forty-one hours, near to death from suffocation by chlorine fumes, parted her cables in the darkness when the Ohio was straining to tow her into the Delaware Capes. The crew of the S-5 is still aboard the Ohio, sufficiently recovered to assist in the salvaging

The Ohio recovered the submarine both times by means of grappling hooks. Again in tow, after this second mishap, with heavy hawser chains from her sternpost shackling her to the stern of the battleship, the S-5 is being dragged slowly shoreward, her nose bumping the bottom of the shelving floor of the
