DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

"Ho, ho. You can't scare us that way," laughed the animal keeper, trying not to appear nervous.

Billy's voice answered, apparently from the bushes.

"But you will be scared when I bang you on the ear," he said.

The circus men looked toward the bushes. At that moment Peggy noticed the Little Wizard's arm move under his robe—the arm which the animal keeper thought he was holding. The arm lerked, and the animal keeper got a hang on the ear that almost knocked him over, and made him drop his rifle.

"There! How do you like that?" called Billy's voice. The helper turned toward the bushes. Again Peggy saw he Little Wizard's arm move, and this time the helper got a bang on the ear—a hang that made him howl and drop his shetgun.

"Now, maybe you'll be afraid of me," cried Billy's voice. "I'll get your guns, and then I'll.—"

But the circus men didn't wait to hear what Billy was going to do. They let go of the Little Wizard, picked up their guns, and ran as though an army of ghosts were after them. The Little Wizard grinned as he jumped upon Boggle's back.

"I might be a lizard

Wizard grinned as he jumped upon Boggle's back.

"I might be a lizard

But I'm not—I'm a wizard." he sang as they set off at a rapid pace for the unknown land.

"Poor little Wee!" cried Peggy. The Little Wizard laughed and pointed behind them. There was Wee, trotting along as lively as you please, wearing his mask and rompers. He was just as he had been before.

"Hurrah!" cried Billy's voice. "Soon
we will be in the land of the unknown"
But what happened to them in the land of the unknown will have to be told in this coming week's story.

Could not speak. He did. "Come in,"
he sald. And because there was nothing else to do, she went in.
She recovered herself quickly, "Wh—

are you here?"

"I'm the assistant." he explained.
"Well. not quite like that," she sald.
"It should be a partnership."

"Fill get the articles of partnership at city hall tomorrow," he laughed.
And they did.

Female Help Wanted

Female Help Wanted

By JEAN MacDONALD

J. Lesile Hogg was one of the few men who have failed to learn that fairness is the best policy when it comes to dealing with employes. That was why Sue Brady had made up her mind that his next tantrum would be the last as far as she was concerned.

And now it had come, He was storming at her across the desk—swearing at her for his own neglect in ordering the boxes of which she had reminded him weeks before. She hesitated a moment to overrule the meekness which had made her listen to just such outbursts for the last two years. Then she drew her lips into a thin, straight line, closed her typewriter desk and took her hat and coat from the rack near the door. Her hand was on the knob before Hogg ceased his shouting and stared at her. Then, louder than ever, "Where're you going?" going?"
"Out," she said, quietly. "Perhaps I'll

"I'm fired," she said, and opened the door.

Now Sue was not a business girl for nothing. She went direct to a newspaper office and wrote out a short "ad."

Permanent position as secretary or assistant executive wanted by reliable and experienced young lady. Write S. B., 136 Babcock street, city.

"Every day until further notice," she said, as she handed the "ad" to the clerk.

That evening was the first in six weeks that Jack Gillis did not see Sue. For though Sue had been brave enough during the day, she had to pay a woman's price for unpleasant excitement when she was alone in her two-and-a-half-a-week room. And as she was fully aware that red eyes do not make for beauty, she refused to see Jack.

It is little wonder that Jack was downleaded.

Making More Money The Stenographer-President

Teaching school may be an interesting profession, and one which carries with it a feeling of work well accomplished, but no one ever accused it of being munificently rewarded—particularly during the last two decades, when the cost of living has been continually the cost of living has been continually mounting skyward.

It was because she realized the narrow financial future which was facing her that Miss Nellie Scott, teacher of a country school in Michigan, resigned her position and came east to Bridgeport. Conn. to accept a position as stenographer in a factory which manufactured wire wheels. That was fifteen years ago, but even then Miss Scott recognized the impetus which the automobile ought to give to the wheel industry and the $12 a week which she received for her work held out a promise of bigger things than the $15 which she had been making in Michigan. It was true that the factory was run down, the living conditions were had and the surroundings far from congenial. But the new stenographer went to work to remedy these conditions as far as it was within her power. Little by little she enlarged the scope of her activities within the plant until she added bookkeeping, shipping records and timekeeping to her secretarial duties. The first raise was one of $3 a week and later, because the company was not really able to pay out more salary, she suggested and received an increase in the form of stock.

Mainly through her efforts the company was placed on a paying basis. The men and women in the factory were was | mounting skyward.

Mainly through her efforts the company was placed on a paying basis. The men and women in the factory were made more contented with their working conditions. The wheels were standardized and guaranteed. Shipments were watched with the greatest of care and satisfaction was assured to all purchasers. Then, when the president of the company announced his intention to retire and requested the stockholder-workmen to nominate his successor, there was but one name mentioned—that of Nellie Scott, who started in at $12 a week and now heads her own factory in Connecticut.

Oh, How the Housewives Will Revel Next Week—

In Looking-Selecting-and Saving Money In the Great September Sale of Housewares

At Wanamaker's!

Store Closed All Day Monday (Labor Day)

WO things make this event a matter of importance, one that touches every well-kept house, and concerns every efficient housewife, dwelling in or near this city:

The qualities of the goods and the greatness of the assemblage more than 75,000 articles at the start, a week ago, and hundreds more on their way by this Money savings also play no small part in the considerations of the thrifty-minded. The things in the Sale are priced from 10 to 40 per cent less than regular.

But while prices form a pleasing feature of the opportunity, this is not the kind of Sale that needs to be built around price.

We are glad that we can help you save money on your household furnishings, through the economies that inevitably result from such large merchandising operations.

But the main purpose and central pivot of the Sale is to help you to furnish your kitchen, laundry, pantry, cellar, housemaid's closeteven your sewing-room and maybe your attic, if you keep your trunks and cedar chests up there - with the very finest equipment - the articles that will last longest and will do the best work while lasting.

No other kind are worth the space they take up, whether in a house or in a store, and we are constantly surprised at the space they are allowed to take up in advertisements!

What is making this Sale great from its starting day, last Wednesday, both in its attendance and in its selling, is the confidence women feel in buying where nothing flimsy is sold.

Every article in the Sale, however humble its use or small its size, or however low its price, is fully up to Wanamaker standards of quality, and is as NEW as today's output of glittering silver dollars from the Philadelphia Mint.

The great quantity and wide assortment of articles give assurance to the out-of-town woman that her possible inability to attend the opening days of the Sale this week have not finished her chances.

And to the same degree it assures the bride, or any other woman newly furnishing a kitchen, that nearly everything she

If you are a man, of course, or a woman who never beat up cakes or ladled out oatmeal, you may think that wooden spoons are all alike.

Yes, Madam, It's You We're Talking About! HOW swiftly will all the wheels round, in this busy month of September, if after the rest and recreation of Labor Day, the O. W. W. (other workers of the world) are as eager to plunge again into their labor as are the splendid army of American housewives!

Talk of honoring the worker! here's one who deserves the crown—the home-maker!

Talk of essential industries! the creation and maintenance of the HOME tops them all.

And talk of housefurnishings sales! such as spring up so plentifully at this season! Which of them can offer 75,000 or more of absolutely new household utensils, of the best makes, in the standard sizes and styles, at authentic reductions from regular prices, rising from 10 to 40 per cent-save can possibly need for it, save the ice for the new refrigerator and the food to prepare in the shining, sanitary new cook-pans and kettles, can be bought at this one time and in this one place. She will find-

Refrigerators Bathroom furnishings Woodenware Coffee machines Brooms Kitchen cabinets Brushes Cleaning cloths Sewing machines Galvanized ironware Vacuum cleaners Enamelware Dress forms Trunks Nickelware Vacuum bottles Cedar chests Mops Porcelain-top tables

Clothes baskets and market baskets Within those comprehensive groups are contained thousands of articles, large and small, that are needed at this instant in hundreds of households.

White enamel pantry-

ware

Let it again be emphasized that there is among them, not merely no article of inferior class, but virtually no article of an ordinary class!

This is not a Store that sets out to do ordinary things in an ordinary manner, or it would long ago have gone the ordinary road to oblivion or dead-andaliveness.

If you have ever washed one, you know better. The smooth, clean finish on Wanamaker woodenware, which, compared with common pie-boards,

rolling-pins, step-ladders, etc., is almost snowy, is always remarked upon. Despite restricted production, shortage of lumber and the other handicaps that might have frightened timid folks out of holding this Sale, all the woodenware in the Sale, like all the other housewares, is of the very best quality that the market produces; and this covers construction as well as finish.

You can set your foot safely on a Wanamaker step-ladder; no insidious knots to eat out the strength of the wood!

Again: a whole chapter could be written, with annotations from the ashman, and maybe a line scratched by the neighbor's cat, on the difference there is between ash cans and ash cans, and garbage ditto.

The superiority. therefore, of the galvanized ironware in this Wanamaker Sale is a thing worthy of remark. Heavy metal to start with; seams soldered and leakless; both interiors and exteriors showing the smoothness conducive to sanitation.

A finish, in the form of deep flanges, prevents the bottoms of the cans from rusting out, and renders the lids inaccessible to even the most persevering of the four-legged prowlers of the night.

Then as to hinges on tin pantryware. Even these are not alike all over the world. Some are broken, some will break, and others will not - which is a sign that they are of Wanamaker quality.

If you ever knew any one who lost her temper over a bread-box with a broken hinge, bring her in to this Sale and let the salesman show both of you the long, strong, continuous wire which fastens down the hinges of these snowy, attractive, but strongly made boxes and canisters in the white enamel pan-
