How Would You Like It?

best house with another woman. He had a coffee-mill. He hung it by one screw. He engaged and swung around. He was on the door-step. He kept the light turned out. He lit my wall all blue polka dots. He looked like a giraffe in spots. He asked her to turn the crank. He could hang over the table. He said, "Look where you're going. You're turning 'round yourself." He asked, "How would you like it?" He said, "I did that to you?" He said she was: "I'd look where I was going." He wouldn't change it.

She never went down cellar. For I kept the home fire burning. I wanted to slap her. But I didn't. I left the hoe on the walk. She tripped over it and fell. She hurt herself in spots. They were more scattered than mine. She skinned her precious nose. She stubbed her pointed toes. I said, "Look where you're going." But I never mentioned cranks. She called me something awful. And she got mad and left. Isn't it odd? Folks had their own medicine. But they love to see you take it.

PLAN CELEBRATION OF ARMISTICE DAY

Walter M. Gearty Post of Legion Will Gather Veterans of First Regiment

Armistice Day will be celebrated by the Walter M. Gearty Post, No. 2115, of the American Legion, in Philadelphia. The observance of this notable date will be marked by a reception of the veterans of the First Regiment, commanded by the late Major General William M. Gearty, and the veterans of the 104th Infantry, and the 104th Central Postal Directory, and the 104th American and world war veterans who served at any time with the First Regiment.

The post arranged for this gala occasion a meeting in the First Regiment Armory, Broad and Callowhill streets. The new state constitution was read, and a graduated scale of dues for the coming year was established, under which the $4 annual dues, seven-fifths cents is dropped each quarter. Trustees of the First Regiment donated to the post for its use two large rooms which will be converted into one room, which will be of sufficient size to enable the post to put into effect the plan recently submitted to the posts throughout the national headquarters.

Looking forward to the next state meeting, the post formed a marching club. It is planned to take a strong contingent to the state meeting in Pittsburgh next year. The comrades agreed to donate a certain amount each toward defraying expenses. In addition, entertainment will be conducted throughout the winter months, with the assistance of the band, to increase this fund.

This post is one of the peace-setters for the legion in the city. Its organization consists of the following: J. D. Cousart, vice commander; A. Bonne, post finance officer; Horace J. Inman, historian; Thomas A. Logue, employment officer; James R. Martin, medical officer; Rev. J. J. Wolfe, Americanization officer; D. Lloyd Moore, insurance officer; George Wagner, legal officer; and Newton Terry, vocational officer.

The executive committee is composed of Roland C. Heisler, Horace J. Inman, Marcus J. De Wolf, J. H. H. Van Hook, R. M. Warren, and J. J. Wolfe. The band committee, which has arranged a band of forty pieces, is George W. Jones, George Braunwart, Ignatius Cylindar, Alfred G. Proud and Ed. Reichelt.

On the entertainment committee are: William L. Rountree, H. J. Murray, Charles S. Rambo, Frank L. Mueller, C. B. Cobough and James G. Charles.

3868 HUNTERS GIVEN LICENSES FOR SEASON

Many Are Already in Field After Rail Birds—No Limit Placed on Bag

Since the opening of hunting season last October, 3868 ginning licenses have been issued, blanks are attached to the license. On this blank the bearer of a license must file a report, stating exactly how much game he kills during the season, also the number of times he has been hunting. This must be forwarded to the State Game Commission at Harrisburg at the expiration of the hunting period.

The unusually large number of licenses already issued is due to the opening of railbird season last Wednesday, it is believed. The railbird season is open until November 30, and no limit is placed on the number of railbirds a hunter may kill. The same condition applies to redbirds, now in season, except that the redbird season closes October 30.

Bears may be shot this year from October 5 to December 15. The limit is one season and not more than three bears in a season. Pleasants are in season from the first of October to November 30, with the limit placed at four a day and ten in one season.

Rabbit season, the favorite for local hunters opens November 1 and closes December 15. The same bag limit followed as last year—five a day and ten in a season. Deer season extends from December 1 to 15, inclusive, with an allowance of one a season or six a camp.

Additional game wardens have been appointed to see that violations of the hunting restrictions mentioned in the licenses are prosecuted.

NURSES TOOK SERUM TESTS

Women Decrease Soldiers' Deaths by Large Ratio

London, Sept. 6.—How women from the Royal Free Hospital submitted to experiments with anti-lockjaw serum that soldiers might benefit is told in a report just issued by the Research Defence Society. It is another chronicle of heroism.

About a dozen of these young women were inoculated with the serum. Weekly blood tests were made for the presence of the antitoxin. When the efficiency of the serum was proved the death rate from lockjaw became one in 20,000, whereas previously it had been nine in 1000 wounded men. Major General Sir David Bruce said that but for the injections the number of cases would have been ten or twelve times as great.

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

LAND OF SURPRISES

By DADDY

[Last week was told how, in answer to Peggy's wish, the Little Wizard came with three masked beasts, Woggie, Boggie and Wee, to carry her away to a strange land where a pair of surprising things would happen. The story left them on their way to the strange land. Billy was with them, but was made invisible by the magic of the Little Wizard.]

CHAPTER I

The River of the Brave "Behold the Land of the Unknown! Behold the kingdom where surprising things happen!" Thus spoke the Little Wizard in his squeaky voice. At the same time he waved his magic stick and motioned to Peggy to look through a curtain of vines which he was holding aside for her.

"Far had they journeyed from Peggy's home. She had ridden comfortably on the back of Woggie, and the Little Wizard had ridden on the back of Boggie, while tiny Wee had trotted on behind. And Wee were Peggy, Boggie and Woggie. Peggy had been able to read their bodies and peek through the eyes of the clown masks that hid their faces. Where had they been able to gain knowledge that their eyes held a friendly sparkle that made her feel safe and secure with them?"

"Behold the Land of the Unknown!" cried the Little Wizard again, and Peggy might look through the curtain. "Oh, an exclamation of delight, for no fairer land had ever seen."

They were on the top of a high hill, and before them lay a broad, beautiful park, stretching farther than the eye could reach. There were green meadows, low hills, grassy slopes on which to roll, pleasant trees along which to play, orchards of wild fruit to furnish a feast, a tangled wilderness to explore, hills to climb, with a rocky mountain peak towering above them.

Along the meadows, the slopes, the trees, the wilderness, the hills and crags were animals roaming and feeding. They were animals of all kinds, some large, some small, but all seemingly peaceful and harmless.

"Here's the land of wishes," Wash all the dishes." The Little Wizard hummed this song and grinned at Peggy. "Oh, let's hurry there!" cried Peggy. "This is a surprise to find the unknown land so charming, and I want to learn what other surprises await us."

"Ho, ho! Just look below, if you are brave." Peggy looked below, and there she saw a rushing, roaring river. It came tearing down from the mountain through a rocky, impassable gorge, and swirled on to the brink of a waterfall, plunging down into a broad, sparkling lake.

"Why, why, how wonderful!" exclaimed Peggy, and then, as she noticed the river was, her joy in the sight turned to dismay. "How in the world will we ever get across?" she cried. The eyes of the

You surely have a pair of old black kid gloves that are past the wearing stage. Cut from the tops several bowknot silhouettes, as I show you above. Paste them on the cuffs of the gauntlets. Little Wizard sparkled as he answered with a chuckle. "Those who are brave will not stay on this side. Those who are brave will find a way to that side."

Saying this, he rode on Boggie down a steep path that led to the edge of the river. "Peggy followed on Woggie, and little Wee came behind."
