where folleyin that guy has got you, you boneheaded tramp! I can—
But, Joe, they ain't no Young Kearny to talk to. He has climbed through the ropes and is standin in the middle of the ring lookin at Brennan, which is just about gettin to where he can recognize close relatives. At this point Knockout Hooker's manager comes up.

"Git your bum and let's git up to that Red Cross thing!" he says to the sportin editor, "I can't keep my boy up all night. Say—is they any chanct of gittin a drink up there?"

"Shut up—you." snaps the sportin editor, grabbin my arm and not even lookin, at him, "Come on!" he says to me. "This is gonna be good!" and with that, Joe, he pulls me into the ring.

We're on Young Kearny's heels when he shuffles up to the once great Brennan and stands there twiddlin his thumbs and lickin his lips like a kid up before the principal for bein late for school. Brennan is lookin down at the before the principal for bein' late for school. Brennan is lookin' down at the floor, Joe, still more or less dazed and floor, Joe, still more or less dazed and all the company he's got is the bucket and a towel. And once a English king congratulated him for knockin' a English champ cold!

Tough, hey, Joe?

"Mister Brennan," stammers Young Kearny suddenly, like he was addressin' the Court of Special Sessions, charged with burnin' the orphan asylum and had been caught with a can of rasoline had been caught with a can of rasoline.

with burnin' the orphan asylum and had been caught with a can of gasoline and a torch. "Mister Brennan—I—guess you don't 'remember me, but—ah—it seems that—as a matter of fact I do a little scrappin' myseif. I—well—I'm Young Kearny—I mean I fight under that name and—to be exact my real name is Anthony H. Pizzaro—and I—I'm awful sorry that guy outlucked you tonight, but I know you'll knock him for a roal the next time!"

Brennan slowly looks up, turnin' that butchered face of his into the calcium that was still lit over the ring. Joe, and I must say I have seen easier faces to look at. This here Knockout Hooker had certainly did a workmanlike job! First Kid Brennan don't seem to see anything but the empty seats and the fact that he's all by himself. Then he slowly looks up at Kearny, whilst that young gentleman looks like he would fain vanish through the floor, as a result of him havin't he nerve to speak to Brennan.

"Thanks. Tony!" he whispers fin'ly

Hooker and Young Kearny stepped into the ring they was gave a cheer which would of satisfied Dempsey. I got quite a pleasantly surprise when Young Kearny throwed off his bathrobe, because no matter whether he was a heaucoup mauler or not, he certainly looked like four aces to me. The way them arm and shoulder muscles rolled and rippled under his skin was very comfortin. His manager and the sportin' editor. I'll give him a column boost in the mornin'. I'd part with my left ear to see him stay the limit'."

"Your cars is safe'" says Kearny's manager. "When he realizes he's been throwed in there against the welter-weight champ, he won't have brains enough left to put his hands up. It sin't bein' yellah—it's nerves! New if—"

Young Kearny has gazed across the ring and seen Knockout Hooker. He gets pale and turns on his manager.

What's the idea, hey?" he whispers, what's the idea, hey?" he whispers, if can't do nothin' with that guy—he'll about murder me! Does the Red Cross have to see a execution tonight?
