

JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Talks of Motor Trips, Tennis, Movies and the Island—Grooms Wedding—Other Matters of Social Interest

WHAT with tennis at St. Martin's today and the returning home from various resorts, I have never seen anything so busy as the crowds in the city. Most people have to travel by day coaches from Maine and Massachusetts. There are so many up-landers they cannot get accommodations. One woman told me the other day the off-woman looked at her in pained amazement when she arrived in Boston one morning and asked for a room at an upper berth through to Philadelphia in two weeks' time. 'Why, lady,' she said, 'how can you expect anything like that? We're booked up to the hilt for 15 weeks now. A great many are traveling in their own motors, so that's a help, but their own on the way down are crowded to the doors.'

Curiosity was at last appeased in seeing Mrs. Morgan Belmont actually in the movies. She's in 'Way Down East.' She's not bad, though she has a minor part, but her face it will. She's on the screen and she carries herself well, but the mouth and chin did not seem natural. Perhaps she was a bit too much nervous in the end, but she seemed at ease and not in the least self-conscious. I went the opening night, when it was very dark, because the play was in one of the boxes. And several others of the principals were there. I hear Phyllis Walsh is one of the ballroom scenes. But she is so fast and danced by so quickly I did not recognize her. It does make it extra interesting when you know the name of the actors and actresses. That's why I am looking forward to the movie which the Junior League girls are to give in a couple of months. It will show every one in it, from Jack Potter ranging in age down to Peggy Dallett and Polly Thayer.

The Grooms wedding was lovely on Saturday. It was down in Warrenton, where Susan has lived most of her life, and the old Virginia house was a dream of beauty with its great hall and wide parlors. Wine and pink delphiniums had never been in Virginia before could not get over the soft beauty of it all.

SPEAKING of Haverford, have you seen the Frank Bohlen's house on Berkeley road? It looks just like the pictures of the best in Haverford. It's finished in rough white and has a square front porch with four pillars. There's a hanging basket filled with vines between each two pillars and two little stone flower boxes on the floor of the porch. Vase trellises are attached on the ends of the porch and by its already existing. The back of the little door on the side, back of the porch. On the roof of the porch are attached about four green flower boxes. The porch has green and black furniture with pillows and table cover of black and white plaid gingham. It's too deliciously pretty for anything.

I HEARD a wonderful story the other day about a small schoolboy, whose mother is very particular about his appearance. She is the most suspicious and span-looking person I know, and Jimmie always looks as if he had stepped out of a bandbox, before he gets into the mud to play.
