NEW SCHOOL HEAD SOON
Board to Choose Doctor Garber's Successor at Next Meeting
The new superintendent of the Philadelphia public schools will probably be named at the next regular meeting of the Board of Education, on the second Tuesday in October.
The resignation of Dr. John P. Garber, incumbent, takes effect November 1, and Joseph W. Catharine, a member of the board and of the special committee on superintendency explained today the new head would be elected at the next meeting.
During the summer the committee has been hard at work and has been canvassing the whole country in an effort to find the man best qualified for the position. Letters have been sent to many of national repute, and those who are more local have been interviewed a number of times.
Mr. Catharine said yesterday no effort will be spared to get the biggest and best man possible.
"Most of the board members feel the same way that I do," he added. "Whatever differences of opinion there may have been in the past, there seems to be no doubt that now all are engaged in an earnest and whole-hearted effort to obtain a man to head the system of whom all Philadelphia can be proud."
