DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

Whoo-Whoo, the Watchman By DADDY

Billy sends word to Peggy that the crows are planning a night attack upon Birdland. Peggy warns Judge Owl. When the crows come they are surprised to hear owl hoots rising from many parts of the woods.

CHAPTER IV The Giant Owl

UDGE OWL and Peggy were as much surprised as the crows to hear the strange owl hoots. They had no idea here were any other owls in Birdland at that time, yet the woods seemed to be that time, yet the woods seemed to be full of them. "Whoo! Whoo! Whoo—oo-oo!" the hoots sounded.
"Whoo! Whoo! Who do you think those owls can be?" hooted Judge Owl in Peggy's ear. Peggy didn't know what to think. The strange owl hoots made her nervous. They sounded mysterious to think. The strange owl hoots made her nervous. They sounded mysterious and scary.

As for Caw-Caw Crow and his flock, they let out frightened squawks and hid among the leaves. They had been ready enough to fight Judge Owl when they thought him alone, but they didn't fancy fighting a lot of owls, particularly in the dark, where owls could see better than crows could.

But the crows had a worse scare coming. A shriek arose from the dark woods—a shriek louder than any owl hoot any crow had ever heard. "Whoo! Whoo! owledge of the wall of a fire engine siren, starting low and mounting higher and higher to a wild scream. This shriek was followed by a voice which said:

"Eat the bad crows! Eat every crow you find in hiding! Eat every crow you find trying to fly home:"

The crows squawked in fear. Then a loud crow voice called a warning: "Caw! Caw! Flee at once!"

The crowds didn't wait an instant to obey. They flew as fast as they could in the shadowy moonlight to the Birdland council chamber. Caw! Caw! Flee at once!"

The crowds didn't wait an instant to obey. They flew as fast as they could in the shadowy moonlight to the Birdland council chamber, which was close by There they perched in the bushee and trees by the hundreds, bunching close together. Not one crow was brave enough to want to be alone with those awful hooting owls abroad in the woods—particularly the owl with the hoot like a fire engine siren.

Peggy and Judge Owl fled along to —particularly the owl with the hoot like a fire engine siren, Peggy and Judge Owl fied along to the council chamber with them.

"Whoo Whoo! Whoo—oo-oo!" The stormy wind, howling through the trees, brought the strange owl cries from all directions. Then a fresh squawking arose among the crows, and as the moon came from behind a cloud and sent its bright light down through the open spaces among the trees, Peggy and Judge Owl could see what had caused it. The crows had caught sight of a number of great owl heads among the branches—just owl heads, with staring, shining eyes, floating among the branches.

"Whoo! Whoo! Whoo—oo-oo!" shrieked the great owl voice, and a command came swiftly after: "Let not one crow escape! If one stirs, pounce upon him!"

"Whoo! Whoo! Whoo—on-oo-oil" came.

"Whoo! Whoo! Whoo-oo-oo!" came "Here am I to pass judgment on the rascally crows."

Out of the bushes, into a patch of monlight, strutted a glant owl—an owl so big that Peggy and Judge Owl gasped in amazement. It was as large as a dozen owls all put together. Its eyes were closed, but as they gazed upon it, the lids slowly raised and the eyes flashed out—two blazing orbs from which darted streams of light.
"Caw! Caw! Caw!" The crows flapped their wings as if to flee. Then new cries arose—cries of alarm. "Caw!
Caw! We're caught. We're caught. We're caught."

Many of the crows struggled as if in a trap. The others, fearful of harm, dropped back to their perches as the great owl voice cried out again: "Whoo!
Whoo! Whoo—oo-oo! Stir not, but listen to the voice of Whoo-Whoo, the greatest of watchman."

More about Whoo-Whoo will be told in tomorrow's chapter.

Wanted—A Grandmother By ELEANOR T. SPERRY

Growing old, at best, is a sorry busiess, but to grow old in harness, arising each morning to tasks to be accomplished and going to bed each night in anticipation of tomorrow's work, is better than growing old in idleness. That was how Mother Kettlety was growing old, in expensive, fur-coated, beautifully domiciled idleness, to be sure, but idle-

Grandmother sighed. It was an awful thing to look regal and aristocratic externally when one felt so humdrum and useless inside. Suddenly she gigsled, quite youthfully. "Billy, how's this for a scheme? I'll advertise my services in the Morning Star. You call it to Madge's attention without letting on who it is, and perhaps her cousin will try me for that one night! They'll think I'm anybody's grandmother and nobody will ever know."

Several days before the dance Madge's cousin unfolded for the tenth time the advertisement she had out from the Star. "It does sound genuins," she murmured.

WANAMAKER'S

WANAMAKER'S

WANAMAKER'S DOWN STAIRS STORE

In the Juvenile Shop a Sale of Boys' All-Wool Suits and Mackinaws at 25 Per Cent Less

A Sale of the Utmost Importance to Every Mother and Father of Boys of 10 to 18 Years These suits and mackinaws are brand-new and were bought at 25 per cent less than the regular wholesale prices which we have been paying heretofore this season.

The clothing is of the same high standard, carefully made and tailored, and of sound, long-wearing allwool materials.

On each coat and suit there is a real money saving of a fourth, and every parent knows that that means something on boys' clothes.

Mackinaws Are $10.35 and $11.85

In all sorts of real lumberjack plaids, these mackinaws are made double breasted with convertible collars that can be fastened high to keep the neck and ears warm. They have roomy pockets, patch or plain, and belts that go all around. The $11.85 mackinaw is made with an inverted pleat down the back. Both styles are pure wool, every thread. Sizes 10 to 18 years.

Boys' Suits, With Two Pair of Knickers, Are $14 to $22.50

Half a dozen different styles are among these splendid suits of all-wool cheviots, cassimeres and tweeds of the better grade. They are made single or double breasted, with inverted pleats or knife pleats or with box pleats. All of the coats are lined throughout and have belts all around.

The knickerbockers-and remember, there are two pairs, which will about double the suit's service-are lined throughout and every seam is strongly sewn and taped.

There are fittings for boys of 10 to 18 years in suits at $14, $17.50, $18.75, $20 to $22.50. (Gallery, Market)

Becoming Hats for Women and Girls at $3.85

It seems almost impossible that one can get a hat made of good material on becoming lines for so little, but the Millinery Salons of the Down Stairs Store prove it far from impossible.

Little, round taupe velvet turbans with brims rolling softly back; brown hats with interesting pins stuck jauntily in; black velvet hats in any number, and so they go.

Tams for schoolgirls are of plush or imitation duvetyne at $1, $1.50 and $2.

Women's J sey Suits in Great Variety $18.50, $22.50 to $39

Browns-oh, plenty of browns! Oxfords, blues, heathers and navy are well represented among wool-jersey suits. There are many styles, including sports models and the less mannish suits, too. Some of the coats are lined through the shoulders and the sleeves, others are not lined, and still others are lined throughout. An interesting jersey suit is in blue or Oxford and has a straight back. The shoul-ders and sleeves are lined with plain-color

silk. $35 The Woman Who Wants a Suit Without Fur will find many well-tailored, becoming models among suits of tricotine, serge and Poiret twill at $42.50 to $75. Fur-trimmed suits are mostly of velour, velour de laine and silvertone, beautifully lined. The furs are nutria, sealene and Australian opossum. $35 to $100.
