FOOTBALL FANS EXPECT V-M-I TO SHOW A LOT OF V-I-M AGAINST PENN THIS AFTERNOON

WHEN A BOXER'S MANAGER GETS IN TALKING GAME HE'S ENTITLED TO WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP HONORS

By ROBERT W. MAXWELL Sports Editor Evening Public Ledge

"HIST!" whispered the waiter as he lifted a warning hand after tiptoeing out of a room at the Adelphia the other night. "Step closer and have a look. Jack Dempsey is in there. World's champion and everything." The waiter paused to mark something on one of Dave Provan's bad-news cards-marks which meant woe to the wallet.

"Jack's in there," he continued, "Take a look through the crack in the door. Jimmy Dougherty, the Baron of Leiperville, is with him. So are Alf Clark and Michael Murphy. Alf and Mike are much alike except in physical appearance. Pipe that guy in the gray suit. Guess he's

"Those gents sitting furthest away from the check are newspaper men. The long lean person with the comical mustache is Rutledge Gardner. Get an eyeful of that bored, weary expression. They are serving only ginger ale. Over on the side is-"

A voice waited through the crack in the door. It was a voice which was used to giving orders, for there was an assertive note in every word.

"Yes, I'll fight this Frenchman any time and any place. All I want is SUITABLE arrangements. Get me on that. I gotta have SUITABLE arrangements. I gotta right to get that, ain't 1? Who's champion, anyway? I ask you again, who's champion?"

peck through the door revealed the speaker. He waved away a cloud of cigarette smoke with a lavender mouchoir which left a heliotrope scent in the adjoining atmosphere. He was faultlessly dressed. The corner of a red slik handkerchief peered out of a pocket under the left shoulder. Patent leather shoes with white chamols tops incased his feet. He was the quintessence of sartorial elegance.

"Has anybody seen-" came a voice from the corner. Lotsa Language

WVES, sir," continued the speaker, ignoring what I might have been a question. "that Frog ain't worrying me or nothing. I know what I can do to him, but arrangements has gotta be SUITABLE. They ain't put nothin' over on me yet, and they ain't gonna start now.'

The speaker straightened up in his chair, crossd one carfully creased trousered leg over the other and sighed. His remarks were received with silence, for some real dope was being handed out. The voice from the corner again piped up with :

"Has anybody here seen-"

"Now I got a lot to say," resumed the orator. "I have licked all of them big guys and never run out of a fight. They say I'm afraid of Carpentier. I ain't.

He ain't no fighter and I can lick him in a coupla rounds. This is awful funny. Ha, ha."

"Has anybody here scen-

"Ind MET Fred Fulton," interrupted the speaker, "and Awhat do I do? I knock the big bum stiff in eighteen seconds. Then I meet Carl Morris and sock him in the first round. A lot of truck horses get in my way, and after I get through with them they are swept up with the peanut shells.

"Then I box the big boy, Willard. Don't I knock him for a goal? Don't I win the championship in that fight?"

The speaker tapped his patent leather shoe on the Oriental rug to denote extreme annoyance. He beat a tattoo on the highly polished table with glistening, wellmanicured fingernails. His audience moved restlessly and drew their chairs closer so that one word would not be missed

"Lissen," piped the voice from the corner. "I gotla find out somethin'. Has anybody here seen Doc God-

He's a Clever Guy

A FTER the questioner had been removed the speaker A continued :

"They say I am afraid to meet the Frenchman. They say he is too clever. What did I do to Miske? I ask you. WHAT did I do to Billy Miske? Billy is clever, ain't he? Wasn't I cleverer than him and did i't I sock him in the third round and put him in the analfa? I can box clever if I want to. Carpentier ain't got no chanst a-tall. Not a chanst.

"I'm gonna box him any time and any place, but th arrangements has gotta be SUITABLE. Don't get me wrong on that-they GOTTA be SUITABLE."

Then the orator arose, picked up a fluffy, brown velour hat, adjusted it before the mirror and, without saying farewell, wafted out of the room.

"Looks pretty small for a heavyweight champion. was suggested to the walter as the more or less daintily odored orator floated gently past.

"Huh?" snorted the circulation manager of the bad news, to say nothing of Grand Assistant Keeper of the Ginger Ale Bottle. "Quityerkiddin'. That ain't Dempsey-that's Jack Kearns, his manager.

"Dempsey's th' blg guy what didn't say nothin' all evening!
