

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

BILLY'S QUEER KNIGHTS
By DADDY

When Billy's football team goes to pieces while playing Tommy Tubbs' Fat Warriors, Peggy sings a song which brings her animal friends to help Billy. They dress up in football suits and the Fat Warriors do not know they are animals.

CHAPTER V

The Frog Fullback

WHEN Hoppy-Hop, the rabbit, raced down the football field with the ball, carrying it across the goal line of the Fat Warriors, he made six points and the score stood 6 to 0 in favor of Billy's Queer Knights.

"Rah-rah-rah for Billy's baby football players," yelled the crowd of boys and girls, for they still thought Hoppy-Hop and Toddie Pupkins were just babies dressed up in football suits.

Billy kicked goal and that made the score 7 to 0 in favor of his Queer Knights.

The Queer Knights were in fine humor, for the bears and the dogs and Billy Sam liked nothing better than a rough and tumble tussle and there was plenty of tussling in the football game. But though Billy's Queer Knights played with vim and courage they didn't have any skill at all and so they were all the time being fooled by the tricks of the Fat Warriors.

One trick that fooled them most of all was when Tommy Tubbs ran with the ball, then passed it to Bobby Butter who was going the other way. All the animals raced after Tommy Tubbs, thinking he still had the ball, but when they stopped him they found he didn't have it at all. By that time Bobby Butter had run down the field and made a touchdown. Tommy Tubbs kicked goal and then the score stood 7 to 0.

That trick disgusted Billy's Queer Knights. They were so much vexed they wanted to bite and scratch and kick and hug, but Peggy held them back, telling them that wasn't the way to play football.

The struggle went on, back and forth, without either side scoring for some time. Once the Fat Warriors carried the ball almost up to Billy's goal but then they fumbled the ball. Quick as a flash Billy Sam's heels shot out, and away went the ball to the other end of the field. It was a mighty kick and the crowd yelled with delight.

The Fat Warriors tried their footling trick again, but this time they turned it around. Bobby Butter started with the ball, but secretly passed it to Tommy Tubbs. While the Queer Knights were tackling Bobby, Tommy went down the field, heading for the goal. Billy Goat and Toddie Pupkins saw him, but while they chased after him, he was so far ahead there didn't seem any chance of catching him.

"Rah-rah-rah! Tommy is going to make a touchdown!" yelled the crowd, but they yelled too soon. They didn't know that the Queer Knights had a fullback waiting to tackle Tommy.

The fullback was Gen. Croaker, the frog. He was so small no one had noticed him. Gen. Croaker saw Tommy running for the goal and hopped to meet him. Gen. Croaker was tiny, but he was brave. With as much courage as though he were a giant, he leaped upward to tackle Tommy. That seemed foolish, for the frog had no more chance of stopping the rushing fat boy than the boy would have in stopping a speeding auto.

But fortune was with Gen. Croaker. Tommy saw the green flash as the frog leaped at him. He didn't know what it was—he thought it might be a snake. The frog landed at Tommy's throat—he fell down inside Tommy's loose jersey—he clawed and he scratched—his cold, clammy skin sent chills down Tommy's back. With a yell Tommy halted in his flight toward the goal and clutched at his jersey.

That halt gave Billy Goat just time to catch up with him. Wham! Billy Goat hit Tommy from behind and Tommy went sprawling upon his nose, the ball flying out of his hands and Gen. Croaker flying out of his jersey. Quick as a flash Toddie Pupkins grabbed up the ball and back down the field he galloped for a touchdown behind the Fat Warriors' goal. That made the score 13 to 7 in Billy's favor.

How the game ended will be told in the next chapter.
