The strictest and most drastic The strictest and most drawing vice quarantine under the present administration has been put into effect as the result of Councilman Gaffney's charge that some sections of the city were "wide open."

"wide open."

The Vare leader called on Superintendent of Police Mills about a week ago and challenged his statement that things were "tight" by producing a high list of alleged gambling and disreputable houses, which he said were in operation.

Superintendent Mills said today that for the most part the places named by Councilman Gaffney were of the character he charged, but steps already had been taken by the police to close virtually all of them.

A day-and-night quarantine has been placed on all gambling and disreputable houses of which the police know, he aid. This policy, he explained, will be followed until all underworld characters are driven from Philadelphia.

Despite prohibition, Superintendent Mills said, the number of persons arrested for drunkenness in the last four months has increased 400 per cent. He said men and women apparently have no difficulty obtaining distilled whisky or "raw licker."
