Yale to Number Players

WHEN Princeton and Yale line up in Palmer Stadium next Saturday the spectators, for the first time in history, will know what the game is all about. They will be able to see what is going on, have an intelligent understanding of the play and discuss the star players remaining games of the season. Tad Jones, head coach, made this announcement recently, according to a dispatch from New Haven. Princeton glready has done this, so with this sudden decision at Yale. For the first time in a big game the Tigers were numbered last Saturday.

Roper forgot all about tradition, forgot that he might be tipping the Yale scouts to his style of play; in fact, forgot everything except that he wanted to please the spectators. The football public owes him a vote of thanks.

That's why he is successful. He takes a broad-minded

YALE occupies a very peculiar position this year. The team has been defeated and had a narrow escape in

Bill Roper, head couch at Princeton, had a lot to do

THIS new baseball war, which was declared in Chicago on Monday, is getting serious. Eight clubs in the National League and three from the American have taken a stand for certain changes in the regulation of the national game, even going so far as to favor a twelve-club cogue, excluding the five clubs which are supporting Ban Johnson.

It will be a war to the finish. Each faction believes It in the right and there will be no quarter. Major cague baseball has been split wide open, right on the els of that filthy scandal which bared the sordid details of the crooked world series in 1919.

Sixteen smart men, representing millions of dollars invested in ball parks and franchises, have capped the most accessful baseball senson the game ever has known with war. Such are the fruits of success.

It is not our intention to take sides in this matter. Personally, we don't care. Baseball is in bad at present. he honesty of the game has been questioned and it is up o the parties concerned to work out their own salvation. this can be done by declaring war, let us have war. But while the fighting is going on, the big issue, that of running the crooks out of the game, will be cast aside. The public is not interested in the fight. There was mough of that last winter.

Soon the whole affair will be aired in the courts. Learned attorneys will distinguish between baseball law ind civil law, contracts will be closely scrutinized, and after a couple of months of litigation both sides will get together, bury the hatchet, pay out most of their profits to the legal lights and hope that the poor old public will kick in with more money to have another fight next

At present it stands to reason that the eleven club owners must know what they are doing in establishing a twelve-club league. These men are not acting blindly. because too much money is at stake. They must have been sure of their ground before taking that drastic action. On the other hand, the five magnates supporting Ban Johnson also must have an idea they are doing the proper thing in refusing to join the majority.

THERE are always two sides, the right and the wrong. Only time will tell which is which.

Minor Leagues Hold Trumps

FOR the first time in history the minor leagues seem to hold the trump cards. Each side is seeking their support, and the victor will be placed in a commanding position. Ball players are needed, and the minors have lots of talent. If Johnson gains their support he need have no fear of the future. It will be the same on the

It seems as if the minors would reject the Lasker plan. which caused all of the trouble. Dave Fultz, president of the International League, called the action of the eight National and three American League clubs "childish." He said the minor leagues would continue to take care of their own interests as they have in the past. M. H. Sexton, president of the National Association of Minor Leagues, and A. R. Tierney, president of the Western and Three I Leagues, also have announced themselves as opposed to the plan.

All of the major league owners are in Kansas City, where the minors are holding an annual meeting.

The question of ownership of players will come up if the twelve-club league is formed. It is said that Babe Buth, Eddie Collins, Ray Schalk and other stars on the Chicago, Boston and New York clubs, belong to the American League. The three owners say they own the players. This will start another legal battle.
