INCHES FROM The Golden-Plated Rule By Lillian Paschal Day

> We gave a masquerade party. All Jacky's friends were invited. All were in costume, having fun.

> Suddenly the door opened.
> A giant cat stood there meewing.

The children shricked with glee.

Round and round she swung him. Carefully she avoided hitting him.

She dropped him and walked out.

Came a great bird five feet tall.

He wasn't really hurt, only scared.

the was as big as a pony. Her long tail switched.

She seized Jacky by one leg.

A Hint to Parents

Yesterday I told about "Anti-Gum." Here's another: "Anti-Cruelty." Jacky seemed minus kindly feelings. He swung Kitty-Meow by the tail. Scratches didn't stop him He wore Daddy's gauntlet gloves. He threw stones at birds and frogs. Baby was afraid of bim. Jacky pulled is ears. Baby howled and ran to mother. The poor woman worried about him. "Are all boys cruel?" she asked me. I had raised three-

"Not exactly cruel," I replied.
"Only thoughtless and curious. They annoy other creatures, Want to see how they'll net. Their Golden-Rule bump is a dimple Mothers have to develop it.' "But how?" besought Jack's mother. 'I've reasoned and scolded. His father has whipped him. It doesn't do one bit of good.

But it takes courage," I told her. 'I'll do anything in reason!' She promised fervently.
"Remember!" I admonished her. "No seftening of the nerve now. Desperate disease-desperate cure! Do your part. I'll do mine." So we did.

I laughed at a sudden recollection.

"My boys were broken of cruelty.

Batik Muslin Table Runner-

Some time ago I tola you how to make stunning Batik hangings. Here is a table runner to match. Measure a strip of unbleached muslin the length of the table; allow at each end nine inches for hangover and one ard one-half inches for the hem. Have the strip hemstiched. Draw the design or have it stamped. Paint it in with a small brush and melted wax for paraffin), which must be kept in a small vessel over a low flame. Let the wax dry, Dip the runner into a large container of cold dye of the desired color. When dry, place between layers of newspaper and press with a very hot iron till all the wax is removed. You will find this an artistic yet inexpensive runner.

About Blouses

Back to normal"—yes, and front to normal, too—seems to be the slogan of the blouse candidates of the autumn. The blouse that is long as an Arnold Bennett novel, the sweeping casaque—this is still worn. But in looking over the imported and domestic models shown today one cannot help being impressed by the fact that the most feethers. today one cannot help being impressed by the fact that the most fashionable blouse ends at the normal waistline.

This does not mean that the most fashionable blouse is worn under the normal waistline. Quite the reverse. We still go over the top, even though we do not go far. And, although the lingeria model for wear with the suit is often of the tuck-in variety, the more elaborate model is worn over the skirt. Frequently a sash of contrasting material finishes the juncture, and this sash gives play to all the whimsicalities of trimming which distinguish the winter modes. But this is not universal, and many of the most stunning models enter into no such diplomatic relations with the skirt.

One floor-sweeping wing lifted. A shower of stones came from it. They weren't very large. Didn't hurt much, but some. Last came a huge baby. (Father found a fine baby mask.) He wore immense rompers, "Goo!" and "Da! Da!" he gurgied At Jack he swooped. Jack yelled. He pinched the boy's ear-hard. Bird, cat and baby said together: "How do YOU like it? That's what you do to us! Remember the Golden Rule!" Jack's cure was complete.

In the matter of fabric there seems In the matter of fabric there seems to be a tendency not to let georgette do so much of it. Gone is the day when one's mind ticked "georgette" simultaneously with blouse. Crepe de chine, that fabric which has occupied so much of the attention of the designer of frocks, has taken away much of its prestige. And both foreign and domestic designers have lavished upon crepe de chine their fondest blouse endearments.

Ah, yes, you may exclaim, but that is a three-piece costume. No matter. The frock of this sort gives, after all, the same effect as waist and skirt, and from it we may deduce the fundamental policies of the blouse. These concern themselves with contrast of fabric and color and, above all, with line. Certainly we may learn from Jenny's black velvet and scarlet crepe de chine three-piece garment that it is infinitely proper to wear with our velvet or duvetyn or velours skirt a blouse of crepe de chine in contrasting color.

All this time Peggy and Billy were looking for beechnuts in the woods and having a fine feast. Finally they noticed that the breeze which had been swaying the tops of the trees had turned into a raging gale. That made them think of Toddie Pupkins up in his nest.

"My gracious, this wind is becoming strong enough to smash the trees," cried Peggy. "And if the bow breaks, down will come rock-a-bye puppy and all."

"I think we'd better see how Toddle is coming along," answered Billy, and they started on a run for the fir tree. "Whee-ea-ze!" roared the West Wind. huffeting and tossing Toddle's nest "Whew-ew-ew-ew!" shrieked the Northwest Wind, banging, buffeting, and tossing it on the other side. The buffets made Toddle think that his dream-boat had struck a rock. Up he bounced and his eyes flew open. "I think we'd better see how Toddle

The nest was swinging wildly back and forth, and for a moment Toddle didn't know where he was. Then he remembered that he was in his new airy and free home—the nest Caw-Caw Crow had built in Birdland.

"Woof! Woof! This is too airy and free," barked Toddle, snuggiing down into the nest. "Whee-ee-ee, sieep, Puppy, sleep," sang the West Wind, jounding the cradle until Toddle almost flew out. "Whee-ew-ew" screeched the Northwest Wind, snatching at the nest as if to tear it to pleces. Like strong boys in a football game, the winds didn't know how rough they were becoming But Toddle Pupkins did.

"Woof! Woof! I didn't know that living in a tree was anything like this," 'Woor! Woor! I didn't know that living in a tree was anything like this," barked Toddie. "Woof! Woof! I wish I had Caw-Caw Crow's wings so I could get down from here without falling.

The Cradle Beckers

"Whee-EEE!" murmured the West Wind, sently swaying Toddie Pupkins in his nest in the top of the fir tree. "Wnee-ee-ee-ee!" it sang aloud as if, like Peggy, it were crooning the lullaby. "Rock-a-by, puppy in the tree top."

"Whee-ee-ee! I'm vocking this puppy sound asleep," sang the West Wind."

"Whee-ee-ee! I'm rocking this puppy sound asleep," sang the West Wind."

"Whee-ee-ee! I'm rocking this puppy sound asleep," sang the West Wind."

"Whee-ee-ee! Come back to sleep," roared the West Wind "Whew-ew-ew! It had been and all."

"Whee-ee-ee! Toddie a bump that would break his legs and spash his neck. But Toddie didn't fail straight down. He hit a spreading branch which caught him for a moment, bent beneath him, and rolled him off on another branch. This second branch rolled him to a third, and so orn until he bounced off the lowest limb of the tree.

Even then he would have hit the ground with a mighty thump if Billy had not seen him coming. Billy made a football run and a football catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a football catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as safely as a football run and a rootball catch and Toddie landed as sa rock him harder and he will go sounder asleep."

So they rocked Toddie Pupkins harder and harder. At first the rocking made Toddie dream that he was floating happily through the air on little cloudlets bound for the Dog Star where lots of meaty bones were waiting for him. Then as the rocking became harder. Toddie dreamed that he tumbled out of the cloudlet into a boat that was being tossed about by an angry sea.

"Whee-ew-ew!" whistled the Northwest Wind, shaking the nest on one side. "Whee-ec-ee!" went the West Wind, shaking it on the other side." And Toddie dreamed the sea was becoming a mile and that he was growing sea sick.

Hoppity-Hop, the rabbit, raced by on the way to his bureow. "Why don't you try a snug berth deep down in the earth, deep down in the searth" squeaked Hoppity-Hop.

"Woof! Woot! That sounds good. I'll try a snug berth down under the earth," growled Toddie, beginning to dig away at an animal hole he had found near by.

What Toddie discovered under the earth will be told tomorrow.
