When the steamship West Ekonk docked at Pier No. 48. South Wharves, yesterday, two chief mariners who had lost their vessels recently debarked. They were Captain Knudsen, of the Burnside, and Chief Officer Hardy, of the Lake Feronia.

The Burnside was destroyed by fire and her officers and crew of fifty-five men were rescued in the nick of time. The Lake Feronia was wrecked when she struck the rocks in the Gulf of Bothnia.

Sailing from this port early in October for a port in France, the Burnside was nearing her destination when fire was discovered in the cargo of coal. Captain Knudsen told how his men fought the fire for hours, and how it steadily guined headway until it was pecessary to send wireless calls for help.

When the tug Goliath responded the entire superstructure of the Burnside was destroyed, and exciting incidents attended the removal of the crew, soweral of whom were burned on the face and arms fighting the fire. The last sight of the Burnside was of a blasing mass of wreckage, settling showly in the water. Officers and crew were landed at Falmouth, and from that port sailed for their homes.
